Re: Agenda Item G.1 – Final Action on Sardine Assessment, Specifications, and Management Measures

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

For more than 40 years, Wild Oceans has represented our conservation-minded sport fishing members with a mission to protect the future of fishing. We recognize that this future depends on our ability to maintain resilient forage fish populations within the California Current Ecosystem. The Pacific sardine stock biomass decline from more than one million metric tons in 2007 to less than 130,000 metric tons (MT) this year,¹ coupled with a range-wide breeding failure of Brown Pelicans² and elevated strandings of California sea lion pups since 2013,³ reminds us that it is time to move away, once and for all, from ecologically-harmful policies that manage each species to maximize yields to fisheries, without regard for the impact on other species in the food web or the community as a whole. Preserving the ocean's forage base is not only the first step in advancing an ecosystems approach to managing fisheries, it is an effort to prevent irreversible damage to marine ecosystems.

The council should set the 2015-2016 harvest guideline at zero

The Pacific Fishery Management Council acknowledges the importance of protecting sardine and mackerel when biomass is low. To this end, the council established a CUTOFF in the Coastal Pelagic Species Harvest Control Rule and Fishery Management Plan. "CUTOFF is the lowest level of estimated biomass at which directed harvest is allowed."⁴ This policy recognizes that fishing during periods of low abundance can exacerbate natural declines, cause a steeper retraction and stall recovery of the sardine stock. The precipitous decline of Pacific sardine to less than 130,000 MT leaves the council with no choice except to set the July 1, 2015 to June 30, 2016 harvest guideline at zero.

The council should reevaluate the Harvest Control Rule

The Harvest Control Rule (HCR) does not, however, adequately account for the greater forage needs of the ecosystem. The ongoing impact on California Sea Lions and Brown Pelicans provide us with a stark reminder of the delicate balance between predator and prey in the California Current Large Marine Ecosystem. Single-species management of forage species without regard for the impact on other species in the food web is inconsistent with a precautionary approach to sardine management and current recommendations to leave at least 40 percent of unfished forage biomass in the ocean.⁵ The council should prioritize a re-evaluation of the CUTOFF and other parameters of the HCR in order to maintain biomass in the water to provide adequate forage for dependent predators, specifically to "manag(e) forage stocks for higher biomass than B_{MSY} to enhance and protect the marine ecosystem."⁶

In conclusion, we urge that the council set the Pacific sardine harvest guideline at zero for the 2015-2016 fishing season as required by the HCR and initiate a reevaluation of the HCR for the purpose of creating more precautionary management that will lessen declines in dependent predators and reduce the likelihood of forage fish collapses.

Theresa Labriola

<https://takeaction.takepart.com/actions/act-now-sea-lion-pups-are-starving>

The Pacific sardine population is in collapse, and predator species are now suffering because of the precipitous declines in their prey. In 2013, California sea lions experienced a striking “unusual mortality event,” followed by significant numbers of stranded and dead sea lions last year. Sea lion deaths in 2015 are on pace to exceed 2013 numbers, with about 70 percent of sea lion pups expected to die this year before weaning age. Simply put, sea lions are suffering because of a lack of high-quality forage fish—sardine and anchovy. The harvest framework for these species must be fixed to provide adequate forage for dependent predators like sea lions.

The March 2014 Pacific sardine assessment concluded that the Pacific sardine population has crashed 74 percent (2.3 billion pounds) since 2007, with no signs of recovery. During this time the directed commercial fishery caught nearly 1.6 billion pounds of sardines, many of which were the older, larger fish that have a higher reproductive value. All signs indicate the latest sardine assessment will show few sardines left in the ocean.

I am concerned about the collapse of the Pacific sardine population and the subsequent effects the lack of this important forage fish are having on other marine animals that rely on it as a critical part of their diet.

As the sardine population has plummeted, I am also concerned about increases in Northern anchovy fishing. Commercial fishing of anchovy, as sardine populations have crashed, may place increased pressure on this forage fish that is missing critical management safeguards. All signs are that the anchovy population is at historical low numbers, while fishing is increasing. In the absence of any recent full population assessment or any signs of healthy anchovy recruitment, allowing up to 55 million pounds of Northern anchovy to be harvested off California could put the anchovy population and the predators that depend on it at great risk. The last thing we need is for anchovy to be overfished before it has a chance to recover.

I am writing to request that you halt fishing of Pacific sardine immediately while the population is in decline, and fix the Pacific sardine management framework to better account for the needs of the ecosystem. This means increasing the “cutoff” factor in sardine management as previously requested by Oceana, so that fishing stops before the population reaches such dangerously low levels. Fishing needs to stop sooner during a collapse so that the collapse is not as severe and long lasting. I also ask that the management framework for Northern anchovy be fixed and a population assessment for this important species be prioritized. This is necessary to ensure adequate forage is maintained for dependent predators, such as sea lions, California brown pelicans, chinook salmon, and the many other marine species that depend on abundant forage fish.

RE: Agenda Item G.1 – Final Action on Sardine Assessment, Specifications, and Management Measures for 2015-2016

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

We are writing with regard to the upcoming decision on the Pacific sardine harvest management measures at the April Pacific Fishery Management Council meeting. Because the estimate of Pacific sardine biomass has declined precipitously since approximately 2009¹ and projections for the coming season are well below the CUTOFF parameter of 150,000 mt, we urge the Council to take action to adopt a harvest guideline of zero mt for the 2015-2016 season in compliance with existing harvest guidelines under the Coastal Pelagic Species Fishery Management Plan.

At the Audubon Society of Portland we are especially concerned about the millions of seabirds that nest along Oregon's coast that depend on forage fish, like Pacific sardines, to survive and successfully produce young. Pacific sardines can make up a sizeable part of the diet for several seabird species that nest in Oregon as well as other sites along the California Current Ecosystem (CCE) including the Rhinoceros Auklet², Common Murre³, and the threatened Marbled Murrelet⁴. In order to ensure healthy populations of seabirds, closing the Pacific sardine fishery while biomass is very low would be prudent.

With the likely closure of the Pacific sardine fishery we are concerned about increased fishing effort on northern anchovy. Northern anchovy are also a key prey item for many seabirds. The most poignant example illustrating this strong predator-prey connection would be the recent Brown Pelican nest failure events. Over the past few years researchers have reported range-wide breeding failure in this species, from the Gulf of California north to the Channel Islands⁵. Scientists have concluded that prey availability during the breeding season is the primary cause of this catastrophic breeding failure. Breeding pelicans from this region depend heavily on anchovies, which comprise from 33-100% of their diet⁶. For this reason, reported anchovy declines are strongly suspected to be a key factor in the pelican breeding failure.

On top of this, there currently is no reliable stock assessment for northern anchovy populations in the CCE. The last stock assessment was performed 20 years ago (1995) and so current information is outdated and inadequate. Therefore, we ask that the Council and NMFS expedite an assessment of northern anchovy populations (central and northern subpopulations) as soon as possible. We are encouraged that the Council has recently discussed a new anchovy stock assessment, and that NMFS intends to work on this in the near future. However, given the current dire state of the Pacific sardine population and the potential for increased fishing pressure on northern anchovy, a stock assessment for northern anchovy should be prioritized.

Thank you for your consideration of our comments.

RE: Agenda Item G.1 – Final Action on Sardine Assessment, Specifications, and Management Measures for 2015-2016

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

We write with regard to the Pacific Fishery Management Council's (Council) adoption of final harvest specifications and management measures for the 2015-2016 Pacific sardine fishery. In response to estimates of very low biomass¹ and in keeping with the Pacific sardine harvest control rule,² we request that the Council take action at your April 2015 meeting to adopt a harvest guideline of 0mt for the 2015-2016 season. Additionally, we reiterate our previous request that the Council and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Fisheries Service (NOAA Fisheries) seek to initiate a full stock assessment for the northern and central subpopulations of northern anchovy as soon as possible. By taking these actions, the Council will ensure that it is fulfilling the intent of its sardine harvest control rule while also advancing its understanding of the current status of another crucial forage species, northern anchovy, which is likely to experience increased fishing effort in the event of a sardine closure.

Below, we discuss each of these requests in greater detail.

Adopt a Pacific sardine harvest guideline of 0mt for the 2015-2016 season

In the harvest control rule for actively managed coastal pelagic species, the CUTOFF parameter is the biomass level below which directed fishing is not permitted. CUTOFF is intended to set aside a buffer of spawning stock that is protected from fishing and available for use in rebuilding efforts should the stock become overfished.³ For Pacific sardine, the CUTOFF value is fixed at 150,000 metric tons (mt) and is subtracted off the top from the overall biomass available to the fishery. Accordingly, harvest levels determined by this rule will decline as overall biomass declines until it reaches the CUTOFF, at which point the harvest guideline would be zero.

As part of Agenda Item G.1 at the April meeting, the Council will consider an updated stock assessment for Pacific sardine that projects stock biomass to be between 132,884 mt and 96,688

mt in July 2015 (with the latter number thought to be more likely by the assessment's authors).⁴ Because these projections are well below the CUTOFF value of 150,000 mt, the Pacific sardine harvest control rule calls for a harvest guideline of zero, thereby closing the fishery for the 2015-2016 season. We support the Council adopting this closure in compliance with its sardine harvest protocols. Doing so will allow the Council to meet the objective of CUTOFF (to protect the stock when biomass is low) and its obligations under the Coastal Pelagic Species (CPS) Fishery Management Plan (FMP).

With respect to Pacific sardine caught incidentally in other CPS fisheries during the 2015-2016 season, we request that the Council ensure incidental catch is set conservatively at levels that avoid negative impacts to the sardine population as well as to dependent predators. An appropriately high degree of precaution is necessary now more than ever to ensure that this stock is able to rebound rapidly once ocean conditions become favorable.

Initiate a stock assessment for northern anchovy

Given the collapse of Pacific sardine and the expected suspension of directed fishing this year, it is likely that fishing effort on northern anchovy will increase. Northern anchovy is a vitally important forage species in the California Current Ecosystem (CCE) and is preyed upon by a wide variety of marine wildlife, including commercially and recreationally valuable fish, mammals, and sea birds.⁵

The anticipated shift in effort away from Pacific sardine and toward northern anchovy is happening against a backdrop of great uncertainty with respect to both anchovy abundance and landings. There is currently no reliable information on the abundance of either the northern or central subpopulation of northern anchovy. The biomass estimate for the northern subpopulation is based on outdated and insufficient information, while the central subpopulation was last assessed in 1995.

The few data points that we can look to only compound the uncertainty surrounding the status of northern anchovy. Recent survey cruises conducted by the Southwest Fishery Science Center have detected declining numbers of northern anchovy eggs (including a complete absence of eggs during the Spring 2013 survey)⁶, suggesting a downward trend in abundance. Meanwhile, landings have fluctuated between roughly 2,000 and 20,000 mt over the last 15 years, with coastwide catch exceeding 10,500 mt in 2014 – the highest level since 2008.⁷

These trends, coupled with a paucity of reliable and current information on this keystone forage species, demonstrate an urgent need for an updated anchovy assessment. A likely increase in fishing effort on northern anchovy stemming from a sardine closure further underscores this need. Consequently, we ask that the Council and NOAA Fisheries seek to expedite an assessment of both the northern and central subpopulations of northern anchovy as soon as possible. We appreciate that the Council has recently discussed the importance of an updated assessment, and that NOAA Fisheries has indicated it intends to begin work on this effort later in 2015.⁸ However, given the collapsed condition of the Pacific sardine population and the potential for ripple effects from a suspension of directed fishing, we request that a northern anchovy stock assessment be prioritized in the near term.

Having current and reliable information on northern anchovy will allow the Council to act with greater certainty in setting catch levels that provide for sustainable fishing activity as well as forage for marine wildlife. This information will also advance the transition to ecosystem-based fishery management by providing resource managers with a clearer picture on coastal pelagic species abundance, forage availability, food web dynamics, and ultimately how our West Coast fisheries impact and are impacted by marine ecosystems.

Indeed, focusing increased attention on northern anchovy is essential to managing the CPS assemblage with an ecosystem-based approach. From an ecosystem perspective, the Council cannot truly accomplish the CPS FMP's objective of maintaining adequate forage for dependent predators without having sufficient knowledge on the abundance and status of both Pacific sardine and northern anchovy – the two most important finfish forage species off the West Coast that are the subject of coastwide federally managed fisheries.⁹

In conclusion, we support the Council taking action at your April meeting to establish a 2015–2016 harvest guideline of 0mt Pacific sardine in response to projections of very low biomass; we also request that incidental catch levels be set conservatively and with a high degree of precaution so as to avoid additional harm to the sardine population and to dependent predators. Finally, we ask the Council to prioritize an updated assessment for northern anchovy in light of their significant role as prey in the CCE, the lack of current or reliable information on the species, and the likelihood of increased fishing effort resulting from Pacific sardine declines.

Thank you for your consideration, and for your work to ensure sustainable fishing and healthy ocean ecosystems.

RE: Agenda Item G. – Coastal Pelagic Species Management

Dear Chair Lowman and Pacific Fishery Management Council Members:

I am concerned about the significant number of California sea lion pups washing up on California beaches dead and dying. Seventy percent of sea lion pups are expected to die this year before weaning age. Sea lions are suffering due to a lack of high quality forage fish – sardine and anchovy. We request you fix the sardine harvest framework so that when determining the amount of sardines that can be sustainably caught, enough of these forage species are left in the ocean to provide for dependent predators like sea lions.

The draft 2015 Pacific sardine assessment shows the population has declined 90 percent since 2007, with no signs of recovery. Alarmingly, the sardine population is now at one percent of its historic peak population size in the late 1930's – prior to heavy exploitation that resulted in the subsequent collapse of the sardine population, which persisted for decades. Since 2007, the directed commercial fishery has removed 1.6 billion pounds of sardines from the ocean, taking many of the older fish that have the highest reproductive potential.

The impact of the directed fishery on the sardine population must be seriously addressed. You cannot ignore the effects of fishing on this important forage fish and the impact this is having on other marine animals that rely on this important fish as a critical part of their diet.

As the sardine population has plummeted, I am also concerned about increases in Northern anchovy fishing. Current information suggests the anchovy population is very low and that fishing for these small fish is increasing. California brown pelicans, which depend on northern anchovy, are abandoning their nests because they cannot find enough food to sustain their nesting period and feed their chicks. Without a scientific assessment showing that the Northern anchovy population is increasing off California, increasing fishing effort puts the anchovy population and the predators that depend on it at great risk. The last thing we need is for anchovy to be overfished before the population has a chance to recover.

Please halt fishing on Pacific sardine immediately and fix the fundamental Pacific sardine management framework to better account for the needs of the ecosystem. Fishing needs to stop sooner during a collapse so that the collapse is not as severe and long lasting. Similarly, I ask that you fix the management framework for Northern anchovy and prioritize a population assessment for this important species. Addressing anchovy and sardine management is necessary to ensure adequate prey is maintained for dependent predators, like sea lions, California brown pelicans, Chinook salmon and the many others that depend on abundant forage fish.

Sincerely,
