Dear Chairwoman Lowman and Councilmembers,

On behalf of Turtle Island Restoration Network and our members, supporters and activists worldwide, I again urge the Pacific Fisheries Management Council to craft a plan to transition away from the use of drift gill nets in the swordfish and thresher shark fishery. The most successful measures to reduce bycatch and ecological impacts of this gear have been to reduce the area and time of fishing. Continued use of the gear will necessarily and predictably increase impacts on the fifteen rare, vulnerable, threatened or endangered species affected by this gear. Ultimately, the only method that can address the impacts to all these species is to move to cleaner gear.

Mass untargeted industrial fishing methods such as the use of drift gill nets are simply incompatible with ecosystem level management of fisheries in the modern era as we contend with a background of crashing populations of sharks, turtles, birds, invertebrates and other animals, and mounting climate change stresses from temperature, changing circulation and acidification. The growing trends of damage to ocean ecosystems demand a much more conservative approach that can only contemplate harvesting food using the most ecologically sensitive methods. To its credit, the Pacific Fisheries Management Council has made a number of forward thinking moves to meet these challenges. In that spirit, we urge the council to again take proactive steps to prevent further species declines and new additions to the endangered species list and to plan for the transition away from the use of drift gill nets. While the implementation of hard caps may be a useful interim tool, it seems questionable whether these new measures can succeed in eliminating unacceptable ecosystem impacts where forty years of prior efforts have had patchy success at best and have developed a track record of swapping one problem for another at worst.

As a gear, drift gill nets cannot avoid taking large and unnecessary risks with a large number of vulnerable species.

As we highlighted in our comments in March, the key issue is that the fishery currently adversely affects some 15 rare, vulnerable, threatened or endangered species caught by this fishery. While measures to protect listed endangered species, including sea turtles and whales, have reduced bycatch by reducing the effort and area of fishing, a great many other species are also at risk. For example, the common thresher shark is in serious enough trouble that consideration for endangered species listing is clearly warranted. At least a dozen other affected species are declining and may be headed for the endangered species list as well. With so many competing concerns about protecting such a wide range of keystone apex predator species, the risks of failure and depletion or extinction are very high.

These ecosystem-level risks of depleting or driving to extinction one or more critically important species are compounded by the tremendous technical difficulties in obtaining truly accurate and reliable estimates. For example, a recent reanalysis of old sperm whale data revised abundance estimates sharply upward.[1] Although the new analysis was deemed superior because it "improve[s] the precision of abundance estimates"[2], in fact the recent reanalysis has less precise estimates (estimates showing coefficients of variation of 0.52-0.58) than did the prior estimates (coefficient of variation of 0.31)[3] Currently, management decisions regarding safe levels of mortality and serious injury are being made based on a study that doesn't meet NMFS' own standards or its explanations for what is appropriate for such stock assessments. In addition, recent estimates of population growth rates rely on assumed "default cetacean growth rates" of 4%, rather than sperm-whale specific rates of 0.6%[4] to 1.5%.[5] This issue highlights that precise and reliable estimates are difficult to come by. Given the contrasting estimates, how much confidence can we truly have that any one number is actually correct?

While the specifics of the best science may be debated, the larger picture is that we do not honestly have a clear picture of the true population status of these species and it would be disingenuous of us to pretend that we are making management decisions based on truly reliable information. This story of uncertainty regarding sperm whale estimates is far more true for less well surveyed species. This means in turn that the chances of getting it wrong with serious consequences are uncomfortably high. Given this reality, the current state of the oceans and the legal mandate to reduce bycatch all but requires discontinuing the use of risky and dangerous gears.

The most successful efforts at "cleaning up the fishery" have mostly resulted from simply making sure there is less dirty fishing, rather than improved fishing.

The forty year history of attempts to regulate this fishery is not without some notable successes in reducing bycatch of critically endangered species. However, there is less to these trends than meets the eye. It is hardly a surprise that when an endangered species becomes vanishingly rare, encounter rates become correspondingly low. It hardly counts as a regulatory success if it is a consequence of past tremendously high levels of mortality from industrial fishing. (By this logic, the fishery will be fully "cleaned up" when sperm whales and sea turtles are finally extinct and encounter rates of those species will then "successfully" reduced to zero!) In fact, most of the harm reduction has come from simply reducing the number of sets and the area and times in which fishing can occur. Since encounters and bycatch per unit effort have remained rather more stubbornly high. Essentially, what has been most effective in reducing the ecological impact of the swordfish fishery has been simply reducing effort. The fishermen who have cleaned up most are those who have switched to other gear. Thus, we encourage the Council to continue these efforts and complete the process of transition to cleaner gear.

Unfortunately, the use of hardcaps and performance measures can only be realistically viewed as interim measures. Given the forty years of failure to reduce bycatch to acceptable levels, the outlook for the success of hardcaps is not inspiring. Hard caps must be based uncompromisingly upon the biological requirements of protected species. (As we know, population biology itself does not compromise. If harvest levels are too high, population levels will crash.) However, biologically effective hard caps almost certainly require caps for some species to be below one, such that encounters require the closure of the fishery for multiple years to ensure encounters are acceptably rare. This would mean that fishermen would have to know not only in what season and what areas they may fish, but even in what years. As difficult as that would be, relaxing the regime would merely mean dooming species to extinction, which is unequivocally unacceptable.

Against the backdrop of what is likely to be tremendous regulatory difficulty and economic uncertainly, it would be bordering on irresponsible not to develop a Plan B to look to in the event that hard caps are not as successful as one might hope. This alternative Plan B must take the form of a transition plan in the event this effort fails, since an orderly planned exit from the gear must surely be preferably to a disorganized and sudden halt caused by unexpected collapses of one or more protected species.[6]

Economically, the fishery is a net drag on the economy and an unfair burden on the U.S. taxpayers.

Information presented by the at the March meeting by the HMSMT indicated that based on surveys, the Drift Gill Net fishery earns "average variable profits of about $700 per set under status quo management. Based on the assumptions of estimated observer costs, average observer costs per set of fishing would be slightly higher than $700." In other words, the observers alone cost more than the profits from the fishing. Adding in the costs of data analysis, policy analysis, regulatory development, litigation and all other costs beyond the observer program alone, it is obvious that it costs U.S. taxpayers more money to protect their natural resources from the damage from this fishery than the fishery is worth. Add to the fact that the shark and swordfish produced from this fishery is among the most expensive of foods, allowing this fishery to operate is effectively asking U.S. taxpayers to pay to have their endangered sea

[6] In light of the continued declines of many species and the ongoing risks posed by the use of drift gill nets, stronger standards are overdue. However, in light of the delays and difficulties in producing analyses in a timely fashion for the June meeting , there is the appearance that the management of this fishery may not be proceeding based on solid analysis and information. In the interim until these analyses are complete, perhaps a prudent alternative would be to place a moratorium on the use of drift gill net gear until such time as the analysis of the hard caps has been completed and informed decision-making can proceed.

turtles and whales killed in order to subsidize the production of luxury goods that only the most wealthy can actually afford.

The Relevant Period to Analyze the Potential Performance of the Harpoon Fishery without competition and fisheries impacts of drift gill nets is from before the use of drift gill nets.

Finally, at the March meeting, data was presented on "historical" performance of the harpoon fishery that in fact distorted the historical record of the fishery. If we are interested in evaluating the alternative of a harpoon (and perhaps buoy gear) fishery, the only reasonable comparison is with the performance of the harpoon fishery from before the advent of drift gill net gear. Remarkably, the analysis in March looked back only as far as the 1980s, essentially cherry-picking data from a period where competition from drift gill nets was harming the harpoon fishery, which is not a relevant comparison at all. In fact, historically, the harpoon fishery outperformed what the drift gill net fishery is producing today. In fact, the historic harpoon fishery landed an average of 411 MT of swordfish from 1930 through 1980, with a peak of 1,781 MT in a truly exceptional 1978.[7] In contrast, according to the California Department of Fish and Wildlife, the California drift gill net fishery landed 61 MT of swordfish in 2013, valued at $585,000.[8][9]

While there are objections that prior performance may not be achievable today on account of the smaller average size of fish, it is critical to recognize that part of that current state of affairs is the result of intensive harvesting by the drift gill net fishery. Both the high levels of industrial harvesting and the unselective impacts with respect to the age distribution are certain to have had marked impacts on the age structure of the population of this long lived species today. In effect, arguing that the harpoon fishery is no longer viable because of the impacts of the drift gill net fishery puts the fishery in the unenviable position of someone who murders their parents and then pleads for clemency on account of being an orphan. In fact, given that there are viable harpoon fisheries in the U.S. Altantic and other areas worldwide, the Council should take a more careful look to assess what the viability of a harpoon fishery would be after the closing of the drift gill net fishery and a period of recovery of the population.

The hypothetical "market transfer effect" is unproven, while the "regulatory enabling effect" is proven.

Although it is often hypothesized that global bycatch would increase as the result of closing a very small California fishery, there are several critical assumptions that are simply not supported. First, for bycatch to actually increase, the fishing effort of other fisheries would have to actually increase. However, there are several reasons to expect no such effect. First, the bulk of swordfish on the international market is derived as bycatch in targeted longline tuna fisheries.[10]

For the transfer effect to be a real phenomenon for this portion, it would have to be shown that tuna fishermen increase fishing effort for tuna based on the swordfish market. Furthermore, in the absence of evidence of increased tuna fishing effort to meet US swordfish demand, the high bycatch from the notably destructive tuna longline gear cannot be fairly attributed to any bycatch effect. Second, for a bycatch effect to be real, presumably fishing effort would increase in response to a market price signal to international fishermen. However, this hypothesis would rely rather remarkably on the assumption that the removal of some 350 mt yr^{-1} could have anything other than a negligible effect on a market amounting to some 115,000 mt yr^{-1} globally. As such, the economics simply do not support the notion of anything more than a negligible increase in fishing effort and bycatch resulting from a transition away from drift gill net gear. Finally, the hypothetical transfer effect assumes that U.S. fishermen using or switching to sustainable gears in the Atlantic or Pacific are incapable of increasing effort to replace the supply. Until such impacts are demonstrated, the market transfer effect remains hypothetical.

What is a greater concern is the "regulatory enabling effect" in which lax regulations which allow high levels of bycatch in the U.S. undermine efforts to clean up foreign fisheries or to protect domestic sustainable fishermen from unfair competition. Since both diplomatically and legally the leverage that can be brought to bear on foreign fisheries is intimately tied to the lowest bar set by U.S. regulators, management efforts that permit high level of bycatch in the U.S. have the effect of enabling similar high bycatch fisheries to continue unchallenged abroad as well. For example, Section 101(a)(2) requires the Secretary of the Treasury to "ban the importation of commercial fish or products from fish which have been caught with commercial fishing technology which results in the incidental kill or incidental serious injury of ocean mammals in excess of United States standards." This language automatically limits the ability of the U.S. government (or environmental organizations) to pursue sanctions against foreign fisheries only to those which are more destructive than the worst U.S. fishery. Thus, the most destructive U.S. fishery sets the standard foreign competitors must meet, and when regulators craft only weaker standards for marine mammal mortality, they simultaneously enable similarly destructive foreign fisheries at the same time.

Therefore, we respectfully urge the Council to develop a transition plan to move away from the use of drift gill nets in California waters so that we can address foreign fisheries, to demand prompt analysis of the hard caps program and to take swift action in order to build on the efforts to promote truly sustainable fisheries for the troubled times of the 21st century.

Most respectfully submitted,

Dear Ms. Lowman,

The Deadly Driftnet Fishery for swordfish is operating in violation of conservation laws protecting marine mammals. Driftnets have been banned on the High Seas and along most of the U.S. West Coast because of high bycatch of marine life including endangered whales, dolphins, sea turtles, shark, tuna and other non-target fish.

I urge you to begin to phase out the fishery along our coast and instead to support sustainable fishing practices that don't compromise the health of endangered species, sperm whales, fisheries and our oceans.

Sincerely,

name Nora Chavez

RE: Agenda Item E.3- Highly Migratory Species, Drift Gillnets

Dear Ms. Lowman, Council Members, Pacific Fishery Management Council; Ms. Sobeck and Mr. Stelle, National Marine Fisheries Service:

We, the undersigned 35,588 individuals (including 6,688 residents of California; 1,141 residents of Oregon; 1,453 residents of Washington; and 156 residents of Idaho), urge you to implement the strongest possible hard caps for the 2015/2016 fishing season and beyond for endangered fin, humpback, and sperm whales, short-fin pilot whales, and common bottlenose dolphins; as well as for endangered leatherback, loggerhead, olive ridley, and green sea turtles. Please adopt the California Department of Fish and Wildlife preferred alternative for hard caps and adopt strong performance objectives for other fish and marine mammals. These wild ocean animals are at risk of entanglement, injury, and death in the California-based swordfish drift gillnet fishery. What is more, it is not acceptable to allow this fishery to continue to kill, without consequence, marine life like dolphins, sea lions, large numbers of sharks and other valuable fish in the pursuit of swordfish. The bycatch of these species must be capped, controlled and ultimately put to a stop. To effectively implement hard caps, we ask you to require 100% observer coverage and/or electronic monitoring. Despite current regulations on gear types and allowable fishing areas, the bycatch in drift gillnets is simply deplorable.

Mile-long drift gillnets, meant for swordfish and thresher sharks, form dangerous underwater walls of death that drown or critically injure an appalling number of other animals. These nets entangle and kill roughly one hundred protected marine mammals per year, continue to take endangered sea turtles and sperm whales, and kill unacceptably high numbers of non-target species such as blue sharks, bigeye thresher sharks, striped marlin, ocean sunfish, and others.

Ultimately, to maintain the health and biodiversity of the California Current marine ecosystem, drift gillnets should be prohibited and replaced with cleaner fishing methods. Last year, the Council committed to transition away from drift gillnets to cleaner gear types, and recently California legislators, members of the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate, called on you to support a transition plan that includes a definitive end to drift gillnets off the West Coast. Deep-set buoy gear is showing strong promise as an alternative fishing gear type that effectively targets swordfish with substantially less bycatch than drift gillnets or pelagic longlines. Hard caps should be an interim measure to provide critical marine life with additional safeguards while a full transition plan to clean gear types is developed and implemented.

We strongly oppose any expansion of drift gillnets into the Pacific Leatherback Conservation Area or reintroduction of pelagic longlines off the U.S. West Coast through Exempted Fishing Permits or otherwise. The Pacific Fishery Management Council (Council) and National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) should be moving to transition away from drift gillnets and should not consider pelagic longlines as an acceptable transition gear. This gear type has been banned off California for 30 years for a reason; it carries similar bycatch concerns as drift gillnets. If the Council and NMFS have the goal of a sustainable West Coast swordfish fishery, efforts should focus taking a step forward by promoting clean gears, not taking steps backward to fishing gears known to be dirty.

The Council and the NMFS have the responsibility to protect marine life. Please safeguard our ocean wildlife; establish a transition plan that phases out and prohibits drift gillnets, with meaningful hard caps and 100 percent monitoring designed to reduce and control bycatch in this fishery as an interim measure.

Sincerely,

The below 35,588 individuals

Subject: Please act decisively on swordfish drift gillnets
To: pfmc.comments@noaa.gov

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

Thank you for acting in March to develop a comprehensive plan to shift the fishery for Pacific swordfish away from drift gillnets. Please act decisively at the June 20-25 council meeting to ensure this fishery adopts a more environmentally sustainable alternative.

Drift gillnets indiscriminately capture and kill many species of marine life, including non-target fish, whales, seals, sharks, and dolphins along our coast. During your meeting in June, the Council should establish clear criteria for granting experimental fishing permits to fishermen willing to try alternative gear that is actively tended and that minimizes interaction with non-targeted species.

Further, until the fleet fully shifts to more selective alternatives for swordfish, the existing drift gillnet fishery should be carefully monitored and regulated. The Council should encourage the National Marine Fisheries Service to require observers on all fishing trips when drift gillnets are used, impose firm limits on the number of interactions with living marine resources such as whales and sea turtles, and close the fishery for the season if those limits are reached.

Despite various measures adopted in recent years to minimize harm caused by drift gillnets, the fundamental nature of this gear means that it will continue to cause unacceptable levels of bycatch. Every year spent attempting to make incremental improvements will delay the necessary transition to a cleaner and more sustainable alternative.

We are fortunate to have a robust and healthy population of swordfish along the West Coast. The public should be able to enjoy this prized seafood with the knowledge that our fishermen are catching swordfish while protecting other ocean wildlife.

Sincerely,

Sangna Odedara

Dear Ms. Lowman, Council Members, Pacific Fishery Management Council; Ms. Sobeck and Mr. Stelle, National Marine Fisheries Service:

I urge you to implement the strongest possible hard caps for the 2015/2016 fishing season and beyond for endangered fin, humpback, and sperm whales, short-fin pilot whales, and common bottlenose dolphins; as well as for endangered leatherback, loggerhead, olive ridley, and green sea turtles. Please adopt the California Department of Fish and Wildlife preferred alternative for hard caps and adopt strong performance objectives for other fish and marine mammals. These wild ocean animals are at risk of entanglement, injury, and death in the California-based swordfish drift gillnet fishery. What is more, it is not acceptable to allow this fishery to continue to kill, without consequence, marine life like dolphins, sea lions, large numbers of sharks and other valuable fish in the pursuit of swordfish. The bycatch of these species must be capped, controlled and ultimately put to a stop. To effectively implement hard caps, we ask you to require 100% observer coverage and/or electronic monitoring. Despite current regulations on gear types and allowable fishing areas, the bycatch in drift gillnets is simply deplorable.

Mile-long drift gillnets, meant for swordfish and thresher sharks, form dangerous underwater walls of death that drown or critically injure an appalling number of other animals. These nets entangle and kill roughly one hundred protected marine mammals per year, continue to take endangered sea turtles and sperm whales, and kill unacceptably high numbers of non-target species such as blue sharks, bigeye thresher sharks, striped marlin, ocean sunfish, and others.

Ultimately, to maintain the health and biodiversity of the California Current marine ecosystem, drift gillnets should be prohibited and replaced with cleaner fishing methods. Last year, the Council committed to transition away from drift gillnets to cleaner gear types, and recently California legislators, members of the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate, called on you to support a transition plan that includes a definitive end to drift gillnets off the West Coast. Deep-set buoy gear is showing strong promise as an alternative fishing gear type that effectively targets swordfish with substantially less bycatch than drift gillnets or pelagic longlines. Hard caps should be an interim measure to provide critical marine life with additional safeguards while a full transition plan to clean gear types is developed and implemented.

We strongly oppose any expansion of drift gillnets into the Pacific Leatherback Conservation Area or reintroduction of pelagic longlines off the U.S. West Coast through Exempted Fishing Permits or otherwise. The Pacific Fishery Management Council (Council) and National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) should be moving to transition away from drift gillnets and should not consider pelagic longlines as an acceptable transition gear. This gear type has been banned off California for 30 years for a reason; it carries similar bycatch concerns as drift gillnets. If the Council and NMFS have the goal of a sustainable West Coast swordfish fishery, efforts should focus taking a step forward by promoting clean gears, not taking steps backward to fishing gears known to be dirty.

The Council and the NMFS have the responsibility to protect marine life. Please safeguard our ocean wildlife; establish a transition plan that phases out and prohibits drift gillnets, with meaningful hard caps and 100 percent monitoring designed to reduce and control bycatch in this fishery as an interim measure.

Sincerely,

RE: Driftnet Fishery

I am writing to ask your help because the deadly driftnet fishery for swordfish is operating in violation of conservation laws protecting marine mammals.

Driftnets have been banned on the High Seas and along most of the U.S. West Coast because of the high bycatch of marine life including endangered whales, dolphins, sea turtles, sharks, tuna, and other non-target animals.

Even after the closure, the driftnet fishery killed an estimated 17 critically endangered loggerhead and leatherback sea turtles outside the closed area. Yet, year after year, the fishing industry proposes to reopen sea turtle habitat to deadly nets and hooks.

Death by driftnet is tragic, and extremely cruel. Each boat drags a net nearly the length of the Golden Gate Bridge, which catches everything in its path. Sea turtles, whales, seals and other animals all must come to the surface to breathe, and, when they cannot, their lives end in desperation, trapped in the invisible plastic netting.

Over the past decade, the driftnet fishery caught and killed 885 whales and dolphins. That means that fewer than 50 boats in California waters have killed more whale and dolphins than all other fishing operations in California, Oregon, Washington and Alaska combined.

I urgently ask you to begin to phase out the driftnet fishery along our coasts and to support sustainable fishing practices that do not compromise the health of endangered species, sperm whales, fisheries and our oceans.

Protecting ocean habitats is a critical part of responsible fishery management. Habitat conservation helps ensure long-term sustainable and productive fisheries, vibrant coastal communities, and healthy marine ecosystems.

Thank you for your help on behalf of a healthy ocean environment.

Yours truly,

J. Capozzelli

Dear Ms. Lowman;

My family and I strongly oppose the Deadly Driftnet Fishery for Swordfish on our Pacific coast. We do not purchase swordfish from restaurant menus nor from grocery stores as we are very aware of the vast damage and cruel results to Marine life from these devastating fish nets. Endangered Sea turtles, Dolphins etc. Die!

We urge the phase out of this egregious method of commercial fishery along our coast, and instead please support sustainable fishing practices for the health of ocean life.

Thank you in advance,

M. Gomez
