RE: Overfishing Killing Sea Lion Pups

I'm urging you to take immediate action to stop the widespread over killing of sea lions and sea lion pups along the Pacific coast. This problem has reached an enormous magnitude and could lead to the extinction or near extinction of the sea lion population.

The rapid decline in population is due in large part to overfishing by the anchovy and sardine fisheries. The sea lions depend on these species for sustenance. The sea lions and their pups are slowly starving to death.

The solution: Immediate closure of the sardine and anchovy fisheries until the sea lions can recover. Once the fishery is re-opened, set low limits and monitor/enforce these limits.

I hope you will take the necessary action and end this cruelty against the sea lions. Their extinction will have a devastating effect on other marine mammal species.

Thank you.

To Whom It May Concern:

I request that you immediately halt the anchovy fishery until there is a new stock assessment that shows the anchovy stock has recovered to healthy levels that can support a sustainable fishery, while ensuring there is enough food for whales and other species to eat.

It is my understanding that there has been a 99% collapse in the overall population of anchovies in Southern California due to overfishing. When the population collapses, the remaining population gravitates towards shallow water giving the perception that the fish are plentiful when they are in fact, crashing. These fish had brought in the whales which was allowing for the best whale watching ever. Monterey Bay is an international feeding destination for humpback whales and dozens of other migratory species. Even though Monterey Bay is a National Marine Sanctuary, the government has authorized the taking of over 55,000,000 (55 million) pounds of anchovies every year from an anchovy stock that occurs here. The fishermen are only taking what the government is allowing them to take.

While the government has refused to update their estimate of this stock since 1995, new scientific studies estimate this entire stock of anchovies to be less than 45 million pounds, which means the current allowed catch could wipe out the entire remaining population of these critically important forage fish that feed Monterey Bay's wildlife.

We are obviously letting anchovies go the way of sardines, Atlantic cod, herring, and salmon. With thousands of California sea lion pups starving to death and a multi-million dollar whale watching industry taking place in Monterey Bay, why is the Government allowing this ecological tragedy to happen? The lives of so many marine mammals and birds depend on anchovies. These fish are the foundation of an entire food chain.

Monterey Bay needs to be treated like a true Marine Protected Area. I demand that our government immediately halt the anchovy fishery until there is a new stock assessment that shows the anchovy stock has recovered to healthy levels that can support a sustainable fishery, while ensuring there is enough food for whales and other species to eat.

We must put preservation of our marine ecosystem above corporate profits. Please serve the public, not the fishing industry, and stop making decisions that benefit greedy fishing interests

Hello,

I've learned about the anchovy fishery crisis in Southern California, and I'm writing to urge you to halt the anchovy fishery until there is a new stock assessment that shows that the anchovy stock has recovered to healthy levels that can support a sustainable fishery, while ensuring that there is enough food for whales and other species to eat. While I understand that we need to honor our commitments to commercial fishers, we must ensure that there is a sustainable fishery for them and for the wildlife that depend on it, at all.

Sincerely,
Sara Avery

Monterey Bay needs to be treated like a true Marine Protected Area.

Please, immediately halt the anchovy fishery until there is a new stock assessment that shows the anchovy stock has recovered to healthy levels that can support a sustainable fishery, while ensuring there is enough food for whales and other species to eat.

Nancy Renzullo

Please stop allowing the overfishing of anchovies in the Monterey Bay sanctuary. Paul Nicklen (Nat'l Geo photog) recently posted images & info about what the fishing industry is doing & how the anchovies will go the way of the sardines. Our oceans are already getting trashed with plastic...soon nothing will be left but a big garbage dump.
Please take care of this before it's too late.

Thank you,
Kimberly Heinrichs

The anchovy fishery should be halted until there is an assessment that shows the anchovy stock has recovered to levels that can support a sustainable fishery, while ensuring there is enough food for whales and other species to eat. The way it is done now is going to drive the stock to extinction. Please, manage the anchovies stock properly or there will not be for anybody.

after reading Paul Nicklins article on the sardines I am sickened...this is our planet , our bay , our coats..why do a few fisherman get to kill off everything...over fishing so much that they had to leave a bunch of dead anchovies in the water..throwing bombs in the water to scare off the seal lions..who the hell are you people to let this kind of stuff happen..why don't you just catch and kill everything...this makes me sad to be a member of the human race..we are a most ignorant people , we come along and take and take and don't give back...I am saddened at how we think and act as a people...if you don't fix things now then its goodbye...look at all the buzz this year about all the life in Monterey bay..I was really feeling good about it until I read this article...then bam..back to reality..we are a sorry group of people that don't act on real issues..only what money can buy. so sad for the earth.

To Whom It May Concern:

I am concerned about the population of anchovies as they are such a critically important part of the food web of the marine environment. I hope in any determination of quotas for fishing, that their critical and essential role in the marine food web will be of paramount concern,

I want to bring to your attention that recent data show a dramatic decline in the Northern Anchovy stock that ranges through central and Southern California, from estimates of 1,000,000 tons in 2005 to 20,000 tons today! Anchovies have been a primary food for Humpback Whales, sea lions, common dolphins, and seabirds in Monterey Bay since we documented a massive school of fish that moved into the Bay's submarine canyon in September 2013.

The recent report of the anchovy collapse and population estimate comes from a study by the leading west coast experts on anchovies. The low numbers help explain the recent die offs of California sea lions and Brown pelicans around breeding sites. The decline appears related to ocean conditions and climate changes. The data were analyzed from general sampling surveys conducted by CalCofi off our coast.

Anchovy abundance could recover quickly again if and when favorable conditions return. Humpback whales and sea lions have made a significant recovery after hunting for them stopped in the 70's and along with dolphin species, are consuming a larger portion of anchovies in recent years.

The current fishing quota for anchovies is 25,000 tons and given the most recent and best scientific data suggests a population of less than 20,000 tons, and considering the percent whales and other marine animals consume, the current fishing catch is too high and this extremely important information should be considered by fishery managers.

The problem is that the fishery managers: National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) has not conducted a formal research survey specific for anchovies since 1995 and are allowing the current fishing quota based on very old numbers. This current crisis is completely a reflection of mismanagement and neglect by government agencies. We are working with Oceana and others to raise awareness about this crisis, and ask for more precautionary management and additional safeguards until they do another assessment of anchovies that is clearly long overdue. This should be immediately addressed in order to preserve the remaining fish and allow them to reproduce which hopefully they may recover and again provide for both animals and a sustainable fishery.

A characteristic of a low anchovy population is a reduced range and the fish gather in large dense schools nearshore, exactly as has happened in Monterey Bay near the mouth of the submarine canyon. This huge fish concentration resulted in a large concentrated group of Humpback Whales, sea lions, dolphins and birds intensely feeding in a small area over the last three summer/falls. Humpback whales migrate after the feeding season to Mexico where they mate and give birth over winter. Last year several Humpback Whales stayed here through winter due to all the food.

Alarm bells were triggered in early October of this year when our friend Paul Nicklen, premier marine mammal photographer for National Geographic Magazine came to Monterey Bay after Nancy Black told him about all the large groups of feeding Humpback Whales. With his report we soon discovered commercial fishing had started right where the whales were feeding and most concentrated. Anchovy fishing usually involves legal use of seal bombs, small sticks of dynamite, used to scare sea lions out of purse seine nets.

Over the last month, it was clear the whales had moved away from the concentrated fish due to fishing. We could see the significant reduction in fish from our boats depth sounder, which displays fish schools below the boat. Through October, it was clear the fish were dramatically reduced as fishing progressed every day (with a break on weekends), and whales moved away from this area of the Bay. We are very concerned that the use of seal bombs, the fishing effort by several vessels with skiffs used to pull around purse seine nets, and the large reduction in food left for the whales had a serious and detrimental impact on them. We are concerned that there won't be enough fish for the population to recover next year given the recent data on the anchovy collapse. This scenario is highly distressing to us. The whales were directly pushed away from what was an abundant, highly concentrated, and predictable food source in a small area, for a large portion of the endangered Humpback Whale population off our coast the last three years. They were highly harassed with "seal bombs", and large vessels with nets and skiffs while the fishing occurred all through the night as anchovies tend to move closer to the surface at night. Whales are known to feed during both night and day, however for the month of October and into November they were unable to feed in the areas of dense fish. In the morning, the whales were not found in the best feeding locations after fishing effort the night before. In fact, there were reported observations of whales "waiting" about a mile or so from where the boats were ending their fishing activities from the previous evening, waiting to get back to main feeding zones.

As many people have asked us; how could this happen in a "marine sanctuary"? The Sanctuary has no control of any fishing activities in the Bay. This is another serious issue as we hope the regulations will change in the near future so that when such problems like this arise and are reported by those of us out at sea everyday, then immediate action can occur to remedy these problems. In this case we alerted NMFS very quickly after we discovered this conflict, but they were not concerned and were not open to our direct reports, and they were unaware of the recent study by MacCall et. al. regarding the anchovy collapse. We then tried to call and left messages for those higher at NMFS with no success. The Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary was notified as well, but said they have no authority over seal bombs or fishing, and currently there is no enforcement personnel in the area so no one could go out at night to observe the interaction between fishing vessels and whales.

We were involved in the recent broadcast of Big Blue Live on PBS through the BBC that aired from the Monterey Bay Aquarium during late August. In the six live shows in the U.S. and three live shows aired in the UK, the strong message given was that Monterey Bay is an example conservation area where animals have been protected and therefore their numbers have increased and populations have recovered from near extinction. It was a celebration of success, broadcasted live from Monterey Bay and showcased the large concentration of feeding whales on the plentiful schools of anchovies from both a boat and a helicopter. Many whales were filmed lunge feeding together - a feeding method that occurs when the fish are near the surface and from 1 to 15 whales come out of the water with their mouths open to catch the fish - an extremely spectacular sight to witness! The whales were often feeding with hundreds of sea lions and common dolphins. Please see our Facebook photos and videos from the last few years if you haven't seen this yet. No one could have predicted that just over a month later, commercial fishing on the anchovies would start with boats likely using seal bombs (dynamite) to clear out whales and sea lions away from their food source. In addition and most detrimental the fishing depleted the anchovies in the Bay (over 3,000 plus tons) so severely that the whales would be forced to leave the area where the fish were most concentrated at the head of the submarine canyon just west of Moss Landing. On average each whales eats from 1-2 tons of fish per day.

We have collected data for over 30 years on the distribution, relative abundance, and behavior of whales and dolphins in the Bay on all our whale watch trips. This is highly valuable information regarding long term data and changes related to oceanographic conditions. With this data we can show a direct negative impact of the anchovy fishing during October on the whales and other marine animals. This mismanagement will effect the future of fishing and whale watching in Monterey Bay. Ultimately our industries both depend on cautious regulations by the government to protect our fish stocks for the fisherman and the whales.

The fishing in October directly impacted the whales with about 3,000 tons plus taken last month so far. Also, we worry that seal bombs are an extreme detriment to whales and want NMFS to ensure they should not be used in or around whales. Thank you,

Marla Marcianelli

Is the Pacific Fishery Management Council just another of hundreds of Federally funded bureaucracies where appointees collect a salary and don't do a damn thing which amounts to actual regulation? No wonder so many people buy the assertion that government costs trillions but can't get anything productive done. This is incredible.

natgeo What is wrong with this picture? Why are all of these anchovies dead? Last week, we were photographing lunge-feeding humpback whales off Moss Landing in Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary, California. The next day we noticed a fishing seiner coming into port so overloaded that the aft deck was below water. When we arrived at the exact same location we had been the night before, there weren't any whales, sea lions, seals, or dolphins.

RE: Agenda Item H.3: Anchovy General Status Review

Dear Chair Lowman and Members of the Council, Ms. Sobeck and Mr. Stelle:

I am writing regarding the apparent imminent collapse of the Northern Anchovy population off the Pacific Coast of North America, more particularly, the Central subpopulation.

As a photographer specializing in marine species, I have spent 2-3 days a week for the past six years photographing marine mammals, invertebrates, and birds from both boats and shore, in and along Monterey Bay. From September 2013 into September 2015, the abundance of species and feeding events was spectacular, due largely to a huge, unprecedented influx of anchovies into the Bay.

1015 Smith Grade, Santa Cruz, CA 95060 (831) 426-1697 jodifredi@aol.com www.jodifrediani.com

From September 2013 through December 2014, not only were dozens, up to a hundred or more, humpback whales seen feeding in the Bay at any given time, but California sea lions were observed feeding in aggregations of thousands, usually alongside dozens of feeding humpbacks. Pods of hundreds and sometimes thousands of dolphins were also abundant throughout the Bay, also observed foraging on fish. 10,000 brown pelicans were believed to be feeding in Monterey Bay as well, along with tens of thousands of sooty shearwaters, common murrelets, terns and a variety of gulls. I understand that the fishing fleet also took advantage of the abundance of anchovies in the Bay during that period.

From my vantage point, it was clear that the spectacle captivated hundreds, if not thousands, of whale watchers and provided me with ample opportunity to capture exceptional images, which I was able to market worldwide as well as use in educational presentations for NOAA, the American Cetacean Society and the Rural Bonny Doon Association, as well as several photography clubs.

While scores of humpback whales and dolphins continued to feed on anchovies in 2015, the number of feeding California sea lions appeared to be significantly reduced. At least, we did not consistently see the immense aggregations from the two preceding years. Nor have the large aggregations of birds been observed. This leads me to believe that while anchovies were still abundant enough to feed a hundred or so humpback whales plus other species, the numbers of anchovies inside the Bay were likely down from the two previous years. To underscore this observation, no sooner did the fishing boats return to begin harvesting anchovies a month or so ago, but the whale watch boats no longer noted large schools of fish on their fish finders and the whales dispersed.

I understand that exceptionally high numbers of anchovies close to shore is not so much an indication of great anchovy abundance, but rather a warning that the overall population numbers are drastically low. Per MacCall 2015¹, “The habitat utilized by spawning anchovies expands into the offshore region in times of high abundance and contracts into nearshore core areas when abundances are lower.” Additionally, much hotter than normal water temperatures of the “Blob” off the Pacific Coast are likely also a contributing factor to the recent nearshore schooling of anchovies.

In Monterey Bay, we usually see humpback whales, blue whales and numerous bird species feeding on krill. In 2014 and 2015, the typical northwesterly winds, which lead to upwelling of cold, nutrient rich waters in the Bay, were largely absent. The typical upwelling did not take place, and we observed just a few whales feeding on krill for a very short temporal period.

With the collapse of the sardine population and a compounding loss of anchovies, the numerous marine species, which depend on productive fish and plankton populations, will be negatively impacted. Health and reproductive success will decline, perhaps even precipitously. At a minimum, the predator species will need to find alternative forage, if such can be found. Already, sea lions and fur seal pups have died in large numbers or have been found in poor condition. Common murre and other bird species have also been found to be dying in uncommonly high numbers. The health and lives of these species depend on sufficient forage species populations. With changing climatic conditions affecting healthy forage fish and krill populations, extraordinary steps need to be taken to protect the predator species dependent upon them. This is a tragedy in the making that should not be exacerbated by commercial fishing.

As a photographer, I lament that I may be looking forward to a desert in the Bay in coming years, with a poor prognosis for successful photography. As an individual with great concern for the welfare of all wildlife, I hope that you will do everything within your power to protect the remaining forage fish populations, hopefully, before it is too late.

The current 25,000 metric tons annual quota for anchovies is based on a 20 year old stock assessment, the most recent for the Central subpopulation of the northern anchovy. New information presented in a recent paper by the Farallon Institute, indicates that the anchovy population numbers are significantly lower than in the 1995 stock assessment survey, and much too low for the currently allowed quota². This needs to be corrected before long-term adverse effects on the future of Northern Anchovies and all those species dependent upon them, including the fishing fleet occurs. At a minimum, further investigation, new surveys and lower quotas for the anchovy species in the California Current must be implemented, or, if deemed necessary, a closure of the fishery. In fact, adherence to the precautionary principle would suggest an emergency closure of the fishery would be in order.

Sincerely,

Jodi Frediani

RE: Agenda Item H.3. Coastal Pelagic Species Management - Anchovy General Status Overview

Dear Chair Lowman and Members of the Council:

The Pew Charitable Trusts has collected 6,351 comments thanking the Council for its leadership protecting unmanaged forage fish in federal waters of the Pacific Ocean and encouraging a thorough assessment of anchovy abundance and adoption of interim protections to limit catch until we have a better understanding of these populations.

Please include the attached petition as an electronic submission on the web site for the Council's supplemental briefing book. The petition itself is included here, along with the names, cities and states of individual signers that were gathered as of November 3, 2015. The Council may continue to receive additional comments in the days ahead.

Thank you very much.

Thank you for protecting forage fish in federal waters

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members,

Thank you for your leadership in protecting unmanaged forage fish in federal waters of the Pacific Ocean.

This landmark decision recognizes the ecological importance of forage fish to seabirds, marine mammals, and the bigger fish that many of us love to catch and eat. Conserving unmanaged forage fish species represents an on-the-water example of the Council's shift from traditional fisheries management to a more comprehensive, ecosystem-based approach. It reflects the principle that responsible management requires asking questions before a fishery begins, rather than after.

The Council's efforts to apply an ecosystem-based approach to fisheries management, built through adoption of a Fishery Ecosystem Plan in 2013, are critical for both unmanaged forage fish as well as managed species such as sardine and anchovy. The collapse of sardine populations and resulting fishery closure this year is a clear indication that we must do more to ensure that fishery managers receive and use the best available science to inform management decisions.

Given the current status of the Pacific sardine fishery, stock assessments of other managed species including northern anchovy are in need of comprehensive updates. Anchovy haven't been assessed in more than two decades. Such outdated information is no way to set catch limits and other management measures with the certainty needed to ensure current management is sustainable for both the anchovy and its predators. Please initiate a thorough assessment of anchovy abundance and adopt interim protections to limit catch until we have a better understanding of these populations.

Thank you again for your ongoing leadership to protect unmanaged forage fish. The Council has set an example for West Coast states to develop and fully implement their own forage fish management plans for state waters. I look forward to your continued work on both unmanaged and managed forage fish species.

Sincerely,
