Agenda Item G.4 – Anchovy Stock Assessment and Management Measures

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

Oregon Audubon Chapters and its over 15,000 members are concerned about the status of anchovy stocks on the West Coast, in particular for the central subpopulation. Anchovies are the single most important prey species for seabirds in West Coast waters¹ and recent evidence suggests that the central subpopulation has plummeted over the past several years, with colonial nesting seabirds and other dependent predators along the Pacific Coast bearing the brunt of this decline.

We thank the Council for its decision last year (at the November 2015 meeting) to request that NOAA Fisheries conduct a full stock assessment of northern anchovy and explore management measures to help protect the declining central subpopulation. With the upcoming November Council meeting, there is the opportunity for the Council to take swift action to ramp up effective management of this important forage species, which will also benefit the many top predators that depend on anchovies for sustenance.

We urge the Council to take the following actions at its November 2016 meeting:

- Lower the catch limit for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy prior to the start of the 2017 fishing season in order to prevent overfishing and ensure adequate food resources for predators (seabirds, marine mammals, and larger fish species).
- Request that NOAA Fisheries establish a schedule to complete a new, scientifically rigorous anchovy stock assessment within a reasonable time frame. The last stock assessment was completed 20 years ago, leading to fishing quotas that are not reflective of the current population.

The best available science on anchovy biomass indicates that the central subpopulation has collapsed since 2009 and has not recovered as of 2016. MacCall et al (2016)² concluded that the anchovy population has collapsed and that anchovy biomass estimates for the 2009-11 time period are the lowest in 60 years and that there has been no substantial recovery of the population as of 2015.

² MacCall, A. D., W. J. Sydeman, P. C. Davison, J. A. Thayer. 2016. Recent Collapse of Northern Anchovy Biomass off California. Fisheries Research. 175:87-94.

At the same time anchovy populations have taken a nose dive, recent studies show a decline in seabird abundance that is attributable to declines in anchovy abundance.³ In particular, Brown Pelicans have experienced mortality events and breeding failures range-wide from 2008-2014, indicating the low availability of prey in the California Current Ecosystem.⁴ In Fall of 2015, a dramatic die-off of mostly young-of-the-year Common Murres occurred along the Pacific Coast, resulting in beached bird rates 6-28 times higher than normal.⁵ It is believed that an important factor that led to this die-off was limited prey availability and abundance.

The Acceptable Biological Catch (ABC) and Annual Catch Limit (ACL) for northern anchovy currently stands at 25,000 metric tons, but this limit is based on a decades-old bio-economic model that did not anticipate the stock declining to the low levels at which it is currently thought to be. New data in prep for publication indicate that current stock to be approximately 97% lower than the stock size upon which existing management measures were calculated.⁶ This information suggests that the current ACL carries with it a significant risk of overfishing.

Because of the evidence described above, we urge the Council to take action before the end of the year to prevent overfishing and make sure that predators, including seabirds, marine mammals, and salmon, have adequate forage. Specifically, the Council should lower the catch limit for the central subpopulation for the 2017 fishing season.

In conclusion, we ask the Council to utilize best available science to adopt a catch limit that is precautionary and safeguards against overfishing in the near term. Over the course of the next 1-2 years, we also ask the Council to move forward with plans to develop a rigorous stock model-based stock assessment for the central subpopulation.

Thank you for your consideration.

RE: Agenda Item G.4 – Northern Anchovy Stock Assessment and Management Measures

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

We write to reiterate our request that the Council to consider and implement revisions to harvest specifications and management measures for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy (CSNA). This includes a specific request that the Council take action at this meeting to reduce the Annual Catch Limit (ACL) for CSNA for the 2017 commercial fishing season. We base these requests on published studies reporting the CSNA has collapsed to below 95% of BMSY through 2015- a result recently corroborated by NOAA’s Southwest Fisheries Science Center’s Egg and larval production of the central subpopulation of northern anchovy in the Southern California Bight. This NMFS report finds that its “results are consistent with previous literature that reported anchovy abundance has declined to very low numbers in the 2010s (e.g., Leising et al., 2015; MacCall et al. 2015; Sydeman et al., 2015 ... our analysis suggests that a relatively small increase occurred in 2014 but did not recur in spring of 2015. (pg 12). All of our indices of abundance indicate the population size has remained near the same level between 2009 and 2015.” (pg 15)

In addition to multiple continued low indices of CSNA from egg and larval surveys, breeding seabirds that rely on CSNA continue to suffer die-offs and poor reproductive performance. Seabirds are delivering of young-of-year rather than adult anchovy to chicks. These patterns have been in place since around 2009. In the past two years, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has provided the Council with detail in regard to poor productivity of brown pelicans from 2009 to 2015, as well as the statutory responsibility of the Council and NMFS to ensure sufficient forage for this species as a condition of removal from the U.S. Endangered Species List.

Conrad (1991)¹ used abundance estimates from 1964-1990 to develop MSY and BMSY estimates (123,336 mt and 733,410 mt respectively), which serve as the basis for the current OFL. In CPS FMP Amendment 8, the U.S. ABC was then calculated to be 25,000 mt, based on the default control rule

(25% of MSY) and the proportion of the stock expected to be in U.S. waters (82%). This long-term average definition of MSY was developed using data from a stock that had not fallen below 299,000 mt.

These management measures are no longer appropriate given continued low abundance of the stock. Hence, Audubon California requests that the Council take the following actions at its November 2016 meeting:

Adopt an ACL of 7,000 mt for the 2017 fishing season, including a 5,000 mt Annual Catch Target (ACT) and a 2,000 mt incidental catch allowance.

As described in the letter from Pew Trusts, this revised ACT would allow for a de minimus fishery consistent with northern anchovy's minor role and low market price, as well as incidental catch in other CPS fisheries. This approach uses the management framework previously established in the Northern Anchovy FMP; prior to Amendment 8, the CPS FMP contained a broader set of management measures for northern anchovy, including a harvest control rule with a CUTOFF value of 300,000 mt, below which the catch level was capped at 7,000 mt provided the stock was above the MSST of 50,000 mt. Without an updated stock assessment for or active management of the central subpopulation, an ACL of 7,000 mt (including a 5,000 mt ACT) would allow the Council to adhere to its most recent understanding of what constitutes an appropriate catch limit during periods of low abundance. This ACL should remain intact until either the central subpopulation is shown to have rebounded to approximately 300,000 mt which is the CUTOFF under the management framework established by the previous Northern Anchovy FMP.

Begin the process to actively manage the central and northern subpopulations of northern anchovy in order to achieve Optimum Yield of this essential forage species.

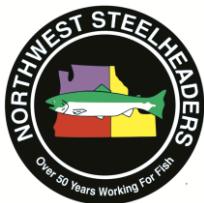

As described in the letter from Oceana and Earthjustice, develop a comprehensive survey and stock assessment methodology for CSNA that incorporates Acoustic Trawl Method surveys, aerial surveys, daily egg production methods and/or other data, as identified in recommendations from the May 2016 workshop. This would also include conducting a stock assessment to inform near-term changes to ACLs and establishment of an MSST for the CSNA; conducting a management strategy evaluation of the CSNA by developing an updated operating model informed by the stock assessment and incorporating ecological factors, such as environmental factors and the needs of dependent predators; and, analyzing harvest control rules to inform adoption in an amendment to the CPS FMP.

In conclusion, we request that the Council take action to adopt an ACL of 7,000 mt for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy for the 2017 fishing season, and take steps to actively manage northern anchovy.

Re: Anchovy Harvest Limits

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

On behalf the 1,600 Northwest Steelheaders members throughout Oregon and SW Washington, I am asking the Council to reduce the catch limit for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy for the 2017 fishing season. Adopting a lower catch limit that reflects the most recent information on anchovy abundance can help ensure a healthy prey base for larger fish that are important to the west coast economy, such as salmon, steelhead, and tuna.

Anchovy is a keystone forage species in the Pacific Ocean, providing a crucial source of food for a multitude of ocean wildlife. Like many forage species, anchovy undergo wide natural fluctuations in abundance. Currently, the best available science indicates the central subpopulation of northern anchovy is at very low levels. Yet catch limits have remained the same since the 1990s, when the anchovy population was much larger.

We have seen firsthand how fish and wildlife are bearing the burden of these recent declines in anchovy abundance – declines that appear to be impacting both the northern and central subpopulations. While some of this evidence is anecdotal, we saw whales foraging and large commercial seiners fishing for anchovy this summer and fall in the Columbia River estuary rather than their normal grounds miles off shore. This was an indication to the thousands of salmon fishermen in the same area that the normal forage was not available out at sea for either predators or fishermen. Meanwhile, for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy off California, all available survey data shows the stock to be at low levels of abundance through at least early 2016, and certainly far below the range of stock sizes upon which current management measures are based. It's time to manage this important prey fish with an ecosystem-based approach to ensure that it will be able to meet predator needs. Please adopt a lower catch limit for northern anchovy for the 2017 fishing season in order to reflect best available science, ensure adequate forage for dependent predators, and prevent overfishing.

Thank you for your consideration of our concerns.

Sincerely,

Bob Rees

RE: Agenda Item G.4 – Northern Anchovy Stock Assessment and Management Measures

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

We write with respect to the Pacific Fishery Management Council's (Council) review of the status of northern anchovy and its consideration of revisions to harvest specifications, management measures, and management category for the central subpopulation in particular. As part of this agenda item, and in response to the most recent and best available scientific information indicating that the central subpopulation is currently at historically low levels, we request that the Council take the following actions at its November 2016 meeting:

- Adopt an Annual Catch Limit (ACL) of 7,000 metric tons (mt) for the 2017 fishing season, including a 5,000 mt Annual Catch Target (ACT) and a 2,000 mt incidental catch allowance, in order to prevent overfishing, ensure adequate forage for dependent predators, and reflect best available science as required by the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA).
- Initiate a Fishery Management Plan (FMP) amendment to eliminate the monitored stock category from the Coastal Pelagic Species (CPS) FMP to ensure that adequate science and management attention is given to all CPS.

As the Council is aware, northern anchovy is a keystone forage species in the California Current Ecosystem (CCE) and is preyed upon by a wide variety of marine wildlife, including commercially and recreationally valuable fish, mammals, and seabirds.¹ In fact, northern anchovy is the single most important prey species for CCE seabirds² and first or second most important for the broader suite of marine predators, such as humpback whales, chinook salmon, dolphins, and pinnipeds.³

For several years, The Pew Charitable Trusts and several other conservation organizations have expressed concerns to the Council about the status of anchovy and the lack of active management of this stock, especially in light of increased fishing effort.⁴ More recently, our organizations, as well as the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS), have voiced concerns regarding low biomass of anchovy in the CCE and the associated impact on brown pelicans and other marine predators.^{5, 6} For the November meeting, we ask that the Council take action to ensure that northern anchovy are managed with precaution, utilizing the most recent and best available scientific information.

Below we discuss our specific recommendations in greater detail:

A. Adopt an ACL of 7,000 mt for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy for the 2017 fishing season.

Under the MSA, the Council's primary mandate is to prevent overfishing while achieving optimum yield (OY) for each fishery that it manages.⁷ In meeting this core obligation, the Council is also required to utilize best available science.⁸ The best available science on anchovy biomass⁹ indicates that the central subpopulation has collapsed since 2009 and has not recovered as of 2016, despite high levels of egg and larval production that were observed in 2014-2015. In fact, the most recent information shows that current biomass may be as much as ten times below the range of stock sizes upon which existing catch limits are based.¹⁰ These recent and significant declines in anchovy abundance warrant immediate Council consideration of revised management measures, particularly given that existing measures (including an ACL of 25,000 mt) are based on a 1991 bioeconomic model that cannot be reasonably described as the most current and best available science on the status of the stock.

In order to meet its legal mandates under the MSA, as well as a key goal of the CPS FMP to provide adequate forage for dependent predators, the Council is obligated to respond to new information regarding the status of the central subpopulation, as well as the status of dependent predators. We recommend that the most direct and effective way to meet this obligation is by updating management measures for the 2017 fishing season. Specifically, we request that the Council adopt an ACL of 7,000 mt for the upcoming season; this would include an Annual Catch Target (ACT) of 5,000 mt along with a 2,000 mt set-aside for incidental catch in other fisheries in the event the ACT is met. This interim ACL should remain in place until either the central subpopulation is shown to have rebounded to approximately 300,000 mt¹¹ or until an ecosystem-based harvest control rule is in place, and at a minimum should be reevaluated prior to the start of the 2018 fishing season.

In addition to helping the Council meet its basic obligations under the MSA, as well as its goals under the CPS FMP, a 5,000 mt ACT (as part of a 7,000 mt ACL) would allow for a de minimis level of fishing commensurate with northern anchovy's modest role in California's CPS fishery.¹² As of the date of submittal of this letter, reported 2016 landings of northern anchovy in California remain around 5,000 mt,¹³ so an ACT at this level should be considered practicable.

As described above, our request for a reduced 2017 catch limit for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy is predicated on concerns regarding the current status of the stock, and the associated risk that the CPS FMP's default monitored stock control rule (which results in a fixed ACL of 25,000 mt) is not sufficiently precautionary given the central subpopulation's demonstrated capacity to collapse to levels below the ACL itself, let alone below any minimum stock size threshold (MSST).¹⁴ Here we discuss those issues in greater detail.

The best available science indicates that the central subpopulation of northern anchovy is currently at low levels.

A recently published scientific study from MacCall et al.,¹⁵ which developed a method for creating an index of abundance based on available survey information, concluded that the central subpopulation was in a collapsed condition and presented a time series through 2011. MacCall et al. found that "anchovy biomasses estimated for 2009-2011 are the lowest seen in 60 years," and that, based on egg surveys conducted since 2011, "there has been no substantial recovery of the anchovy population as of 2015."

Using the same method published in MacCall et al., the time series has now been updated through 2015. The resulting update estimated that in the past 7 years (2009-2015), point estimates for anchovy biomass averaged ~20,700 mt. In the past 4 years since the last anchovy biomass update (2012-2015), estimated biomass averaged ~24,300 mt.¹⁶ While these are biomass averages over time and not estimates of absolute biomass, they clearly indicate that the central subpopulation is presently at levels significantly below the range of stock sizes upon which current management measures are based.¹⁷

¹¹ 300,000 mt was the CUTOFF under the management framework established by the previous Northern Anchovy FMP (Pacific Fishery Management Council, November 1990, Sixth Amendment to the Northern Anchovy Fishery Management Plan).

¹³ California Department of Fish and Wildlife, CPS-HMS Project, 2016 Coastal Pelagic Species Fishery (updated November 7, 2016).

¹⁴ There is currently no MSST specified for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy, making it more difficult to ensure that scientifically sound and precautionary overfished thresholds are set in accordance with National Standard 1 guidelines. The absence of an MSST may also increase the risk of overfishing during periods of low abundance when estimated stock biomass approaches the ACL or ABC.

¹⁶ Thayer et al., In prep.

¹⁷ Thayer et al. concludes that anchovy biomass is currently below 100,000 mt.

In fact, every available survey shows the central subpopulation of northern anchovy to be at low levels of abundance through at least early 2016. These additional lines of evidence include:

- CalCOFI: For the Southern California Current, the 2013 Integrated Ecosystem Assessment, based on California Cooperative Oceanic Fisheries Investigation (CalCOFI) abundance surveys, concluded that “larval anchovy abundance continued a declining trend over the last thirty years to the lowest abundance since 1951.”¹⁸ More recently, Southwest Fisheries Science Center (SWFSC) biologists presented an updated analysis using ichthyoplankton data from CalCOFI through summer 2015, showing continued low abundance.¹⁹
- Juvenile Rockfish Survey: This pattern of anchovy decline was also evident in rockfish recruitment surveys through 2015, as presented in the latest “State of the California Current” CalCOFI Report.²⁰
- CUFES: Although the most recent 2016 CalCOFI data are not yet available, results from the Continuous Underway Fish Egg Sampler (CUFES) from recent surveys indicate egg distribution to be nearshore in a small area, with very low peaks of ~15 eggs/m³, suggesting a scarcity of spawning adult fish. Thus, there appears to have been no substantial recovery of the central subpopulation as of 2016.²¹
- Aerial and Vessel Surveys: Aerial and vessel surveys conducted in 2012-2015 from Point Conception to the Mexico border found only small schools of anchovy, as well as mixed anchovy/sardines, ranging from 490 - 5,000 tons.²²
- SWFSC Indices of Relative Abundance: In an October 2016 report, SWFSC biologists analyzed two indices of egg and larval abundance, and calculated a spatially weighted egg-production estimate to develop an index of relative abundance for the spawning population (a method similar to that used in MacCall et al.). All three indices indicated that anchovy abundance has been low since about 2008.²³ The SWFSC report goes on to state that, “These results are consistent with previous literature that reported anchovy abundance has declined to very low numbers in the 2010s (e.g., Leising et al., 2015; MacCall et al. 2015; Sydeman et al., 2015). Our analysis suggests that a relatively small increase occurred in 2014 but did not recur in spring of 2015²⁴....All of our indices of abundance indicate the population size has remained near the same level between 2009 and 2015.”²⁵

Empirical evidence also points to anchovy biomass being at low levels. With respect to predator response, recent analyses show a decline in seabird abundance that is attributable to declines in anchovy abundance and availability,²⁶ in addition to other predator impacts:

- Brown pelicans have experienced mortality events and breeding failures range-wide from 2008-2014, indicating the low availability of forage in the CCE.²⁷ Catastrophic breeding failures have occurred from 2014-2016 in the Gulf of California,²⁸ which accounts for approximately 62% of the total California brown pelican breeding population.²⁹
- In Fall 2015, an unprecedented die-off of primarily young-of-the-year common murres occurred along the Pacific Coast, resulting in beached bird rates 6-28 times higher than normal.³⁰ Northern anchovy typically represents at least 10% of the adult diet and (along with Pacific sardine) 53% of the chick diet.³¹ Limited prey abundance or availability is believed to have been the primary cause of the event, although domoic acid exposure and increased murre population size may have been contributing factors as well.³²
- A 2016 study led by federal scientists found that the unprecedented, unusual mortality event that California sea lions have undergone for the last four years is specifically tied to the unavailability of sardine and anchovy.³³

We recognize that some have noted potential negative biases and uncertainties associated with recent survey data, methodologies and abundance estimates, including MacCall et al. However, even considering these sources of potential uncertainty, the existing data clearly show that the central subpopulation is currently at a population level for which current management measures are inappropriate.³⁴ Despite the uncertainties inherent in any estimate of anchovy abundance based on available survey data, the MacCall et al. methodology properly accounts for inshore distribution, nearshore contraction of the stock at low population levels, and the effects of survey timing as it relates to fishing activity.³⁵ As such, MacCall et al., along with the surveys, analyses, and published peer-reviewed studies summarized above, constitute the most current and best available science on the status of the central subpopulation of northern anchovy. While the current lack of robust data for the central subpopulation precludes development of a precise stock assessment at this time, all existing and available data clearly show this stock to be at a level that is at risk of being overfished given the current ACL. In short, a lack of precise data does not relieve the Council of its obligation to take action based on updated information. We ask that the Council utilize this best available science to inform its consideration of revised management measures for the stock, as required by the MSA.

The default monitored stock harvest control rule is not sufficiently precautionary when northern anchovy is at low abundance and therefore may risk overfishing.

As described in the CPS FMP, the default CPS monitored harvest control rule sets Acceptable Biological Catch (ABC) for monitored stocks “equal to 25 percent of the best estimate of the MSY [Maximum Sustainable Yield] catch level.”³⁶ We understand and appreciate that this control rule is intended to be precautionary by establishing a 75% buffer between the Overfishing Limit (OFL), which is set equal to MSY, and the ABC. However, we note that the default control rule is not sufficiently precautionary under all circumstances, given new data demonstrating the stock’s capacity to collapse in the absence of significant fishing pressure.

As described in Conrad (1991)³⁷ and in Amendment 8 to the CPS FMP, BMSY for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy was estimated at the time to be 733,000 mt, with a corresponding stock specific MSY value of 123,000 mt (equal to 16.8% of BMSY). In CPS FMP Amendment 8, the U.S. ABC was then calculated to be 25,000 mt, based on the default control rule (25% of MSY) and the proportion of the stock expected to be in U.S. waters (82%).³⁸ This long-term average definition of MSY was developed using data from a stock that had not fallen below 299,000 mt.³⁹ As discussed above, the updated MacCall et al. time series (in prep now for publication) shows the current status of the stock to be approximately 97% lower than the stock size upon which the current MSY proxy was calculated.⁴⁰ Therefore, even a buffer of 75% below MSY does not account for the fact that this stock has recently declined by more than an order of magnitude. Furthermore, having a fixed catch limit or ABC that does not change even as biomass approaches it presents a significant risk of overfishing, as it could allow for removing most, if not all, of the population. In order to ensure that the central subpopulation of northern anchovy is managed with a precautionary approach appropriate to its critical role as forage in the CCE, as envisioned by the CPS FMP, we ask that the Council lower the 2017 catch limit by establishing an interim ACL that is significantly reduced from the current ACL of 25,000 mt.

An interim ACL of 7,000 mt is consistent with the Council’s previous management framework for northern anchovy.

Given the absence of a recent stock assessment, calibrated biomass estimate, or actively managed stock harvest control rule for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy, the Council may conclude that it has limited pathways for calculating an updated catch limit that is responsive to the most recent and best available science. We suggest however that one clear option available to the Council is to utilize the management framework previously established in the Northern Anchovy FMP. Prior to Amendment 8, the CPS FMP (originally called the Northern Anchovy FMP) contained a broader set of management measures for northern anchovy, including a harvest control rule with a CUTOFF value of 300,000 mt, below which the catch level was capped at 7,000 mt (provided the stock was above the MSST of 50,000 mt).⁴¹ This harvest protocol was designed so that fishing only occurred at high levels of abundance, consistent with the explicit goal of ensuring a forage reserve for marine predators. (In fact, the reproductive success of brown pelicans was among the performance metrics used to evaluate harvest control rules and ultimately justify the control rule selected in the Northern Anchovy FMP.)

Without an updated stock assessment for or active management of the central subpopulation, an ACL of 7,000 mt (including a 5,000 mt ACT) would allow the Council to adhere to its most recent understanding of what constitutes an appropriate catch limit during periods of low abundance. Further, adopting an interim ACL of 7,000 mt would improve the likelihood that the Council is able to meet its obligations under the MSA to prevent overfishing, achieve OY, and provide adequate forage for dependent predators, while allowing for a level of fishing activity that is consistent with current catch levels.

B. Initiate an FMP amendment to eliminate the monitored stock category from the CPS FMP to ensure that adequate science and management attention is given to all CPS.

We thank the Council for initiating a review earlier this year of broader management options for northern anchovy, and the CPS Management Team (CPSMT) for developing its August 2016 white paper laying out those options.⁴² One of the management options described in the CPSMT's white paper is a process for moving northern anchovy from Monitored to Active management status, which the CPS FMP characterizes as relatively straightforward:

“Changes to the appropriate management category for each species can be made annually by the Council based on all available data, including ABC levels and MSY control rules, and the goals and objectives of this FMP. Changes in a management category may be accomplished according to any of the four procedures for establishing and adjusting management measures described...in Section 2.0 [automatic actions, notice actions, abbreviated rulemaking actions, and full rulemaking actions]. In addition, CPS in the Monitored management category can be reassigned to Active management on short notice under the point-of-concern framework.”⁴³

While we appreciate that there are several paths available to the Council for moving a species from Monitored to Active management status, we encourage the Council to instead begin a process to eliminate the Monitored stock category from the CPS FMP altogether. Removal of this category would help ensure consistency with the MSA, which does not include a Monitored category for stocks in a fishery. National Standard (NS) 1 guidelines state that, “Councils should identify in their FMPs the stocks that require conservation and management. Such stocks must have ACLs, other reference points, and accountability measures. Other stocks that are identified in an FMP (i.e., [ecosystem component] species or stocks that the fishery interacts with but are managed primarily under another FMP...do not require ACLs, other reference points, or accountability measures.”⁴⁴

Therefore, either a stock is considered to be in the fishery (i.e., in need of conservation and management) and these requirements must be met, or it is an ecosystem component species and not the subject of a directed fishery, or it is classified as unmanaged. In order to ensure that adequate management and scientific attention is paid to all CPS that are the subject of directed fisheries, including northern anchovy, the Council should remove the Monitored category from the CPS FMP. As indicated in the CPSMT’s white paper, the Council could opt to amend the FMP to do so.⁴⁵

Once such an FMP amendment has been adopted, all stocks in the CPS fishery that are not ecosystem component species would be categorized as Actively managed – or, in the absence of a Monitored category, simply “managed.” This would allow the Council to ensure that adequate science and management attention is given to all CPS. However, we recognize that FMP amendments can require multiple Council meetings to complete, along with staff and advisory body resources. Given concerns regarding the current status of the stock and associated impacts to dependent predators, we suggest moving the central subpopulation of northern anchovy to active management status in the near term while the Council considers amending the CPS FMP to remove the Monitored stock category altogether.

Conclusion

In conclusion, we request that the Council take action to adopt an ACL of 7,000 mt for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy for the 2017 fishing season in order to respond to best available science, prevent overfishing, and ensure adequate forage for dependent predators. We also recommend that northern anchovy be moved into active management, and that the Council initiate an FMP amendment to eliminate the monitored stock category from the CPS FMP.

Thank you for your consideration and for your work to ensure sustainable fishing and healthy ocean ecosystems.

Subject: Please protect anchovy populations

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

As Northwest sport fishermen, we have experienced firsthand the evidence of depressed anchovy populations and the apparent overharvest of the remaining stock. This summer and fall, we saw whales move into the Columbia River from their normal foraging grounds to find food. At the same time commercial boats from Alaska moved in, intercepting the schools of anchovies amongst returning salmon and limiting available forage for the whales.

While this evidence of declines in the northern subpopulation of northern anchovy is largely circumstantial, there is significant scientific evidence – including the most recent information on anchovy biomass- to indicate that the central subpopulation is also significantly depressed. Yet harvest limits have not been reduced to address these declines or to consider the needs of predator species, including chinook and coho salmon.

We are asking the Pacific Fishery Management Council to reduce the catch limit for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy prior for the start of the 2017 fishing season. Adopting a lower catch limit that reflects the most recent information on anchovy abundance can help ensure a healthy prey base for marine wildlife such as whales, seabirds, and larger fish.

West Coast fish and marine wildlife, including many commercially and recreationally important species, are likely suffering from these recent declines in anchovy abundance. It's time to manage this important prey fish with an ecosystem-based approach to ensure that it will be able to meet predator needs. Please adopt a lower catch limit for northern anchovy in order to reflect best available science, ensure adequate forage for dependent predators, and prevent overfishing.

Thank you for your consideration of our comments.

NATIVE FISH SOCIETY

Advancing the Recovery of Wild Native Fish in Their Homewaters

Mr. Herb Pollard, Chair
Pacific Fishery Management Council
7700 NE Ambassador Place, Suite 101
Portland, OR 97220-1384

Agenda Item G.4: Northern Anchovy Stock Assessment and Management Measures

Dear Mr. Pollard and Council Members,

We write to ask the Council to reduce the catch limit for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy prior for the start of the 2017 fishing season. Adopting a lower catch limit that reflects the most recent information on anchovy abundance can help ensure a healthy prey base for salmon and a multitude of species.

For nearly 20 years, Native Fish Society has advocated for the protection and recovery of wild, native fish across the Pacific Northwest. During this same time, catch limits for northern anchovy have remained steady despite multiple lines of evidence indicating that the adult population of this vital prey fish is presently at very low levels, perhaps the lowest in 60 years.

Northern anchovies are the most important prey fish in the Pacific Ocean. They provide sustenance for over 54 species in the California Current Ecosystem, including salmon and tuna, a variety of seabirds, and marine mammals like whales and sea lions - more than any other single prey species.

At Native Fish Society our goal is straightforward: utilize the best available science to promote public policy and stewardship that will advance the recovery and protection of self-sustaining populations of wild, native fish in their homewaters. We believe it's time to manage northern anchovy with an ecosystem-based approach to ensure that it will be able to meet predator needs. To this end, we encourage the Council to adopt a lower catch limit for northern anchovy in order to reflect best available science, ensure adequate forage for dependent predators, and prevent overfishing.

Thank you for your consideration of our comments.

Let's Protect Northern Anchovies

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

Northern anchovies are the most important prey fish in the U.S. Pacific Ocean. They provide sustenance for over 54 species, including seabirds, larger fish, and marine mammals—more than any other single prey species in the California Current ecosystem. Recent science indicates that the central subpopulation of northern anchovy is at very low levels, which may be harming dependent ocean wildlife. Yet catch limits have remained the same since the 1990s, when the anchovy population was much larger.

As you consider management of northern anchovy, please adopt a lower catch limit for these fish to reflect the best available science, ensure adequate food for dependent predators, and prevent overfishing.

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members:

I am writing to ask the Council to reduce the catch limit for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy before the start of the 2017 fishing season. Adopting a lower catch limit that reflects the most recent information on anchovy abundance can help ensure a healthy prey base for marine wildlife such as whales, seabirds, and larger fish.

Northern anchovy is a keystone forage species in the Pacific Ocean, providing a crucial source of food for a multitude of ocean wildlife. Like many forage species, anchovies undergo wide natural fluctuations in abundance. Currently, the best available science indicates the central subpopulation of northern anchovy is at a very low level. Yet catch limits have remained the same since the 1990s, when the population was much larger.

Marine fish and wildlife, including many commercially and recreationally important species, are bearing the burden of these recent declines in anchovy abundance.
