RE: Agenda Item F.3 EFH and RCA Amendment 28- Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council members:

On behalf of our combined 70,000 members in California and Oregon, we are writing to express our support for Alternative 1b for the Council's final action on EFH. Protecting EFH is necessary to maintain and increase groundfish populations, which in turn supplies forage fish for our ~140 west coast locally breeding and visiting seabirds. We believe this alternative will yield the greatest benefit for continued productive groundfish fisheries while protecting fragile and diverse seafloor habitats. We also support Alternative 3a to protect deep water habitat within the EEZ.

The negative effects of bottom trawling are well documented in scientific literature. Bottom trawls can topple, crush, and damage slow-growing corals and sponges which provide shelter, nursery and feeding grounds for rockfish, lingcod, sablefish, flatfishes, and others that provide forage for seabirds and support robust commercial fisheries. This biogenic habitat is critical to a healthy and productive ocean ecosystem and sustainable West Coast fisheries.

In particular, we support the protections in Alternative 1b that would prevent expansion of bottom trawling in the Southern California Bight—waters stretching from Point Conception to the U.S./Mexico border— until the area can be further researched. We also support Alternative 1b's protections for important seafloor habitats in Oregon, in particular, Heceta Bank, an Important Bird Area. Heceta Bank is a key feeding ground for birds from 19 different seabird colonies that occur along the Oregon coast, as well as a foraging ground for dozens of other migratory seabirds.

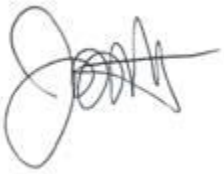

Thank you for your commitment to protecting our fisheries and ecosystems, and for considering our comments.

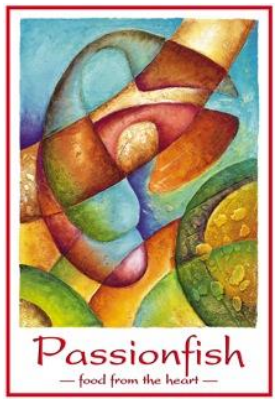

Sincerely,

RE: Agenda Item F.3 EFH and RCA Amendment 28- Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council members:

Thank you for your commitment to protecting Essential Fish Habitat (EFH)—including coral gardens, sponge beds, rocky reefs, and underwater canyons—off the U.S. West Coast from the adverse effects of bottom trawling. Protecting EFH is necessary to maintain and increase groundfish populations, support non-commercial marine life, and drive healthy coastal communities. We, the undersigned organizations support Alternative 1b, which would yield the greatest benefit for continued productive groundfish fisheries and advance a precautionary approach to protecting fragile and diverse seafloor habitats. We also support Alternative 3a to protect deep water habitat within the Excusive Economic Zone (EEZ).

The negative effects of bottom trawling are well documented in scientific literature. Bottom trawls can topple, crush, and damage slow-growing corals and sponges which provide shelter, nursery and feeding grounds for commercially important rockfish, lingcod, sablefish, flatfishes, and others. This biogenic habitat is critical to a healthy and productive ocean ecosystem and sustainable West Coast fisheries. In particular, we support the protections in Alternative 1b that would prevent expansion of bottom trawling in the Southern California Bight—waters stretching from Point Conception to the U.S./Mexico border— until the area can be further researched, protecting pristine seafloor habitats that host high numbers of important corals and sponges. In addition, Alternative 1b protects a network of newly discovered bamboo coral forests, Christmas tree corals, sponge beds, methane seeps, and rocky reefs at important areas like Heceta Bank, Mendocino Ridge, Southern Oregon, and within California's National Marine Sanctuaries.

We urge the Council to adopt a precautionary approach not only regarding the designation of new EFH conservation areas, but also when considering proposed openings of existing EFH conservation areas and Rockfish Conservation Areas. Re-opening currently protected areas of the seafloor to bottom trawl fishing should be dependent upon new scientific data showing minimal impacts to EFH. Alternative 1b incorporates this precautionary approach, while minimizing any potential displaced bottom trawl fishing from current fishing grounds based on available recent fishing effort data provided by the National Marine Fisheries Service. We also support the Council's preliminary preferred Alternative 3a, to protect all waters deeper than 3,500 meters from bottom trawling in the Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ).

Given the current opportunity to make substantial conservation gains in protecting EFH to the benefit of groundfish fisheries while also increasing overall fishing opportunities, we support Council action to select Alternative 1b as a final preferred alternative along with Alternative 3a to close deep waters in the EEZ.

RE: Agenda Item F.3: Groundfish FMP Amendment 28 Final Preferred Alternatives

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

We write in support of the Pacific Fishery Management Council's (Council) ongoing efforts to develop Amendment 28 (Am 28) to the Groundfish Fishery Management Plan (FMP). This action will update Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) designations and protections, consider revisions to longstanding mortality closures, and consider closing other areas to selected fishing gears using the Council's authority to protect deep-sea corals. We appreciate the deliberate, comprehensive, and ecosystem-based approach the Council has applied to the development of Am 28. It has put the Council in position to improve EFH protections, increase fishing opportunity, and invest in the resilience of the West Coast marine ecosystem. We ask that the Council finalize Am 28 for submission to the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) at the upcoming April meeting, with a Final Preferred Alternative (FPA) addressing bottom trawl EFH updates, Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) modifications, and deep-sea coral protections as summarized below, with further detail on the following pages:

- Include Alternative 3.a, the closure of waters deeper than 3,500 meters to bottom-contact fishing gear, in the FPA.
- Ensure that the FPA includes the Comprehensive Conservation Proposal (Oceana et. al. 2013, as modified in November 2016) to create a new bottom trawl EFH Closed Area (EFHCA) for the portion of the Southern California Bight not subject to current trawl effort.
- Adopt an FPA within the fishery footprint that will create new or expanded bottom trawl EFHCA's of sufficient size, quality, diversity, and geographical distribution to ensure a net increase in effective protections for benthic habitat, when balanced against any re-openings of existing EFHCA's or the RCA.
    - Ensure that the FPA protects sensitive and/or priority habitats.
    - Ensure that the FPA does not include any re-openings of existing EFHCA's absent information showing that sensitive and/or priority habitats are nor present in the area.
- Address the importance of methane seep habitats to groundfish and the broader marine ecosystem by including them in the revised description of groundfish EFH in Appendix B of the FMP, and by protecting known seeps within EFHCA's.
- Provided sensitive habitats within the RCA are protected within EFHCA's, adopt RCA Alternative 2.c to replace the coast-wide RCA with a flexible system of block closures that the Council can deploy as needed to address high catch of any species of concern.

Close waters deeper than 3,500 meters to bottom-contact fishing gear (Alternative 3.a)
We appreciate the Council's April 2016 decision to designate the closure of all waters beyond 3,500 meters depth to bottom-contact fishing gear as a Preliminary Preferred Alternative (PPA). Since that time, compelling information supporting Alternative 3.a continues to accumulate. For instance, when the Council finalized the Am 28 Range of Alternatives (ROA) in 2015, approximately 1,500 coral and sponge observations were on record in the US West Coast EEZ beyond 3,500 meters depth. Today, NOAA's Deep Sea Coral Research and Technology database contains over 7,500 observations in the same area, a 400% increase in less than three years.[1] We have discussed the scientific basis, management justification, and legal authority for this measure in considerable detail in previous letters and in the interest of space will focus on relevant new information here.[2]

While the Council has several different authorities under which this action could be justified, previous Council discussions, as well as recent precedents, suggest that the Magnuson Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA) discretionary authority to protect deep-sea corals (DSC) would be a logical choice.[3] Alternative 3.a is highly consistent with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) Strategic Plan for Deep Sea Coral and Sponge Ecosystems, which calls for the precautionary protection of unfished areas.[4] Second, helpful precedents continue to accumulate in the form of similar actions taken in U.S. fisheries under the discretionary DSC authority in Section 303(b)(2)(B) of the MSA. Two of the regional fishery management councils have recently used this authority to adopt closures of large areas beyond the depth range of current fisheries. In December 2016, a Final Rule was issued utilizing the DSC authority to implement a closed area developed by the Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council (MAFMC) from the 450 meter depth contour to the edge of the U.S. Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ), totaling approximately 38,000 square miles.[5] And in January 2018, the New England Fishery Management Council (NEFMC) took final action on a deep-sea corals amendment that includes a closed area from the 600 meter contour to the edge of the EEZ, totaling approximately 25,000 square miles.[6]

Close un-trawled areas in the Southern California Bight
For the area south of Point Conception, we request that the Council include the new bottom-trawl EFHCA proposed by Oceana et al. (as modified per Council guidance in November 2016) in the FPA. This proposal delivers significant conservation gains across all the Am 28 priority habitats, and because it has been carefully designed and modified to preserve the historic trawling footprint, it will deliver this increased habitat protection at essentially no cost to the fishing industry. At the November 2016 Council meeting, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW) noted the similarity of this proposal to a measure considered in Amendment 19 to the Groundfish FMP (in 2005) that would have frozen the footprint of trawling in Southern California based on depth, demonstrating that the concept of closing unfished areas in this region has been under consideration for some time.[7] While the current proposal would include additional (shoreward) areas relative to the 2005 proposal, this is based on more recent data that show no trawl activity for federally permitted groundfish vessels in the region south of Pt. Conception.[8] While there is trawl activity in the Bight from state-managed fisheries, this effort has been carefully mapped by the designers of the proposal and CDFW, and the proposal as currently contemplated would preserve this effort.

Ensure a net increase in habitat protections within the existing trawl fishery footprint
Within the footprint of the federally managed West Coast Groundfish Fishery (i.e. inside 700 fathoms depth and north of Pt. Conception), the Am 28 ROA includes a complex array of proposed spatial management changes: new EFHCA's, expansions or re-openings of existing EFHCA's, and re-opening of the trawl RCA. We request that the Council adopt an FPA within the trawl footprint that will create new or expanded bottom trawl EFHCA's of sufficient size, quality, diversity, and geographical distribution to ensure a net increase in effective protections for benthic habitat, when balanced against any re-openings of existing EFHCA's or the RCA. An overall improvement and increase in habitat protection is consistent with provisions of the MSA that call for the conservation and enhancement of EFH.[9] As such, it is not enough to simply prevent further degradation. Fishery managers should strive to enhance the amount and quality of EFH and restore previously damaged habitats.

For analytical purposes, The EFHCA-related changes have been grouped into two main coast-wide or near coast-wide proposals, which would both include removal of the RCA: Alternative 1.a/1.c (Industry-NGO Collaborative plus Midwater Trawlers Cooperative) and Alternative 1.b (Oceana et. al.). We appreciate the work done by the developers of these alternatives and find that all contain discrete EFHCA adjustments that may prove viable and valuable as part of a comprehensive final outcome. As a package, we remain concerned that Alternative 1.a/1/c would not achieve a net effective gain in habitat protection. Specifically, this alternative would actually result in a loss of protections for certain key priority habitats (e.g. hard substrate, canyons and gullies, etc.) in some regions of the coast, as well as a loss of total protected area.[10] On the other hand, Alternative 1.b (Oceana et al.), in combination with RCA removal, would increase net habitat protections while also producing a net increase in fishing opportunity.[11]

We support an FPA for the area within the trawl footprint that combines the best of both alternatives to achieve a net effective gain in habitat protections including priority habitats. We understand that there are closures proposed in Alternative 1.b that the fishing industry believes are problematic because of overlooked and important fishing effort, or because the existing substrate data are incorrect, or because biogenic habitat bycatch is recorded at the end points of trawl tows rather than the actual location of the interaction. On the other hand, there are recent and compelling examples of new, ground-truthed, high-resolution bathymetric mapping that reveal significant amounts of hard and mixed substrate in areas previously believed to be soft bottom (for example, the Oceana et. al. proposed Russian River EFHCA a.k.a. The Football).[12] And, as further detailed below, Alternative 1.a/1.c proposes several EFHCA re-openings that are not supported by information establishing that sensitive habitats are absent.

There are dozens of potential iterations that could factor in the preceding information, draw on the strengths of each comprehensive alternative, and achieve a net effective gain. Given the complexity of the alternatives, the very recent release of the Preliminary Draft Environmental Impact Statement (PDEIS), and discussions that are ongoing and expected to continue up to and during the meeting, we are not ready at this time to describe a complete, specific set of discrete polygons (i.e. closures and re-openings). Instead, on the following pages we highlight a subset of polygons we consider high priorities for inclusion (in the case of new or expanded EFHCA's) or exclusion (in the case of poorly supported re-openings), as the Council develops a comprehensive FPA for the fishery footprint.

These selected polygons are based on our previously described suggestions for prioritizing habitat types in the development of the inshore FPA, as well as our suggestion that priority habitats should be well represented in the FPA across all areas (i.e. biogeographic provinces and depth zones). For additional detail, please see our letter to the Council dated November 8, 2016, which described a set of priority habitat types including: recently and historically unfished areas, chemosynthetic ecosystems (methane seep habitats), hard/mixed substrate, high-rugosity areas such as canyons and gullies, and biogenic habitat such as corals and sponges.[13]

Re-opening all or portions of existing EFHCA's is an action that must meet a very high standard. New information demonstrating that sensitive or priority habitats will not suffer adverse effects from the re-introduction of trawling must support any EFHCA re-opening that is incorporated within the FPA. Examples of such information should include the absence of significant areas of hard or mixed substrate, absence of significant biogenic habitat as demonstrated through direct observation or absence of bycatch, etc.

- Daisy Bank (Oceana et. al.)
- Bandon High Spot West (MCI)

Include methane seep habitats in the revised description of groundfish EFH in the FMP, and protect seeps within EFHCA's

We appreciate the attention the Council has given in Am 28 to the importance of hydrocarbon seeps and the biological communities they support. These unique features, also known as cold seeps or methane seeps, are areas where chemical-rich fluids are released from the seafloor. This energy source fuels primary production by dense aggregations of chemosynthetic microbes that

[14] Our recommendation for Gray's Canyon is limited to areas outside the Tribal Usual and Accustomed Areas (U&A Areas)

are found both in and on the seabed. Our previous correspondence has gone into considerable detail on the contributions of seep habitats to ecosystem function and services, and the direct and indirect connections to groundfish resources.[16] For instance, a series of chemical reactions initiated by the microbial consumption of methane eventually produces calcium carbonate, which precipitates as "extensive pavements" of the rocky substrate that is a core element of groundfish EFH and which allows deep-sea corals and sponges to gain a foothold.[17] And recent research at the Del Mar Seep, discovered off San Diego in 2012, described significantly higher densities of longspine thornyhead at the most active seep microhabitats than at surrounding, non-seep areas.[18]

The Council's Habitat Committee suggested in April 2016 that the Council consider prioritizing seeps for recognition and protection through Am 28, a request we support.[19] There is a considerable amount of information on the location of seeps off the U.S West Coast, and several of the proposed EFHCA's in Am 28 offer good opportunities to protect seep habitats through new EFHCA's that are well justified due to the presence of other Am 28 priority habitats. Of note are the Southern California Bight, Hydrate Ridge, and Southern Oregon Footprint Modification (Oceana at. al.) and the Brush Patch (Industry-NGO Collaborative). We request the Council include these areas in the FPA.

We also appreciate the Council's November 2016 decision to designate as a PPA the incorporation of methane seep habitats into the description of groundfish EFH through the planned revisions to Appendix B of the FMP.[20] This would be an important step in fostering increased understanding of these features and their contributions to the ecosystem, and could help protect these sensitive habitats from the negative impacts of fishing gear through future action. It would also help ensure that future actions proposed by other agencies that may impacts seeps are carefully evaluated, through the requirement for consultation on activities that may affect EFH. We request that the Council include this in the FPA.

Replace the RCA with Block Area Closures (BAC) and new EFHCA's for sensitive areas
Provided sensitive habitats within the RCA are identified and incorporated into new EFHCA's, and that all other impacts including impacts to protected species are addressed, adopt RCA Alternative 2.c to remove the current coast-wide RCA and replace it with a flexible system of block area closures that the Council can deploy as needed to address high catch of any species of concern.

In particular, the Council has thoughtfully applied EBFM to its decisions on this action to date, and is thus positioned to deliver a solid package of spatial management reforms that will advance resource conservation and expand fishing opportunity. RE: Agenda Item F.3, Groundfish Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) Amendment 28 Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

We are writing to recommend you choose the Collaborative Proposal (Alternative 1.a) when you take final action on changes to groundfish Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and the Trawl Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA). The Collaborative Proposal considers new scientific research, updated habitat surveys, and local knowledge, and results in extended EFH protection for important groundfish habitat as well as improved access to valuable fishing grounds.

Beginning in 2014, a group of industry and conservation stakeholders came together to try and find common ground on EFH and RCA issues. We started by developing a shared vision for the groundfish fishery: a robust fishing industry with improved profitability; stable regulations and minimal controversy; intact groundfish fishing communities; healthy fish population levels and age structures; and resilient ocean ecosystems, with minimal substrate disturbance or damage to sensitive organisms. With this as background, we set ourselves a goal of developing recommendations for EFH and RCA changes that would both improve habitat protection and increase fishing opportunity.

Our group launched a series of port meetings that ranged up and down the coast and covered most of the major groundfish ports. We held more than 30 port meetings and met with over 50 industry participants, as well as various other stakeholders including NGOs and National Marine Sanctuary staff. In addition to formal port meetings, the collaborative group also held numerous small-group and individual meetings to gather supplemental information.

During the port meetings, we cross-referenced fishermen's knowledge of the seafloor with scientific data from a variety of sources. We used large-scale nautical charts, fishermen's plotters, and spatial databases to arrive at a shared understanding of the seabed and its features. Based on this understanding, participants in the port meetings proposed various modifications to EFH and RCA boundaries, and these proposals were refined through extensive discussion. Over 150 distinct areas were discussed and reviewed, and over 100 specific areas were considered for possible boundary modifications.

The collaborative group submitted an initial proposal of changes[1] to the Council at its September 2015 meeting, and a final proposal of changes[2] was submitted for the April 2016 Council meeting. The final Collaborative Proposal recommends boundary modifications for 75 areas, across two regions (Canadian border to 40° 10', and 40° 10' to Point Conception). The modifications consist of new EFH Conservation Areas, re-opening of existing EFH Conservation Areas, and re-opening of existing Trawl RCAs. The final package only includes areas where the collaborative group was able to reach a "Full Recommendation," meaning there was general consensus among affected stakeholders for the proposed change.

The Collaborative Proposal includes a detailed rationale for each of its proposed changes, including both maps and descriptions. In general, the proposed changes are designed to identify the most high-value areas for restoring fishing access, while improving protection for sensitive habitat areas. A few specific points about the Collaborative Proposal are noted below.

First, in a few regions of the coast, the collaborative group did not reach any recommendation and these areas are excluded from the proposal. South of Point Conception, we were unable to gather sufficient industry participants to form a quorum for this kind of collaborative process, and as a result we dropped this portion of the coast from the proposal. Additionally, off Newport, Oregon, we do not include any recommendations in the Collaborative Proposal, as consensus in that region was elusive despite a number of meetings and some good discussions.

Second, for all the regions included in the Collaborative Proposal, we recommend re-opening the Trawl RCA. In the course of port meeting discussions, it was acknowledged that the Trawl RCA was established to reduce mortality of overfished species and support rebuilding by protecting a key depth range. In 2011, however, implementation of the Individual Fishing Quota program dramatically decreased bycatch of overfished species and created individual accountability with 100% monitoring. In the intervening years, many overfished stocks have been rebuilt and the rest are on a path toward rebuilding. Recognizing the important role the Trawl RCA has played, the collaborative group scrutinized the RCA for areas of sensitive habitat that should be designated for protection and included new EFH closures in those areas. Having done so, the consensus among participants was that the remaining areas in the Trawl RCA could be opened to improve fishing opportunity. The Collaborative supports the use of cost-effective research to monitor and evaluate fishing closures over time to better understand their effects and contributions toward management objectives.

In conclusion, we want to express our appreciation for the Council's encouragement and accommodation of our collaborative process over the past four years. We also wish to thank all the participants in the process—fishermen, conservation groups, and other stakeholders. This was a novel approach to problem-solving that brought together former adversaries and resulted in innovative solutions, valuable new relationships, and a solid final product. The Collaborative Proposal will increase protection for sensitive groundfish habitat while also improving access to fishing grounds, and should be adopted in its entirety.

RE: Agenda Item F.3 EFH and RCA Amendment 28- Final Action

Dear Mr. Anderson and Council Members:

On behalf of Oceana Young Leaders, we write in strong support of expanding Essential Fish Habitat protections to ensure healthy oceans and sustainable fisheries into the future.

Thank you for your commitment to protecting Essential Fish Habitat (EFH)—including coral gardens, sponge beds, rocky reefs, and underwater canyons—off the U.S. West Coast from the adverse effects of bottom trawling. Protecting EFH is necessary to maintain and increase groundfish populations, support non-commercial marine life, and drive healthy coastal communities. We, the undersigned organizations support Alternative 1b, which would yield the greatest benefit for continued productive groundfish fisheries and advance a precautionary approach to protecting fragile and diverse seafloor habitats. We also support Alternative 3a to protect deep water habitat within the Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ).

The negative effects of bottom trawling are well documented in scientific literature. Bottom trawls can topple, crush, and damage slow-growing corals and sponges which provide shelter, nursery and feeding grounds for commercially important rockfish, lingcod, sablefish, flatfishes, and others. This biogenic habitat is critical to a healthy and productive ocean ecosystem and sustainable West Coast fisheries. In particular, we support the protections in Alternative 1b that would prevent expansion of bottom trawling in the Southern California Bight—waters stretching from Point Conception to the U.S./Mexico border— until the area can be further researched, protecting pristine seafloor habitats that host high numbers of important corals and sponges. In addition, Alternative 1b protects a network of newly discovered bamboo coral forests, Christmas tree corals, sponge beds, methane seeps, and rocky reefs at important areas like Heceta Bank, Mendocino Ridge, Southern Oregon, and within California's National Marine Sanctuaries.

As you make a final determination on the conservation of essential fish habitat, you have the opportunity and responsibility to protect these resources, both for their intrinsic value and for the important benefit that these public resources provide us in return. Any changes to existing protection measures, including Rockfish Conservation Areas and Essential Fish Habitat Conservation Areas, should result in a net increase in protections for all habitat types, regionally and coast-wide. Furthermore, it would be irresponsible to reopen to bottom trawling any areas known to contain priority habitat features.

We urge you to adopt the essential fish habitat conservation alternative that is based on the proposal submitted by Oceana and others (Alternative 1b). Alternative 1b will increase the protection of seafloor habitats off the U.S. West Coast and keep open areas important for fisheries. We also urge you to adopt the protection of the deep-water habitat area off California (Alternative 3a). Protecting these important habitats will greatly benefit the ocean ecosystem and future generations, while maintaining vibrant and sustainable fisheries.

Sincerely,

RE: AGENDA ITEM F.3 - EFH AND RCA AMENDMENT 28 – FINAL ACTION

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

Pacific Seafood would like to commend the Council, Council staff, NMFS, the Project Team, the Collaborative, the Midwater Trawlers Cooperative (MTC), and many others for all of the hard work they have all done to get the EFH and RCA Amendment 28 ready for final action at this April meeting. We have reviewed the Preliminary Draft Environmental Impact Statement and strongly urge the Council to adopt the following combination of alternatives:

Subject Area 1: Changes to EFHCAs

Alternative 1.a: The Collaborative Alternative
Alternative 1.c: The MTC Alternative
Alternative 1.f: The Potato Bank Correction Alternative

Subject Area 2: Adjustments to the Groundfish Trawl RCA:

Alternative 2.a: Remove the Trawl RCA

Subject Area 3: Use of MSA Sec. 303(b) discretionary authorities

No-action Alternative

Pacific Seafood acknowledges that one of the greatest long-term threats to the viability of commercial and recreational fisheries is the continuing loss of marine, estuarine, and other aquatic habitats, and that habitat considerations should receive increased attention for the conservation and management of fishery resources of the United States.[1] The Collaborative gave habitat considerations increased attention and an overall net gain by recommending 1,100 sq. miles of additional EFH closures and 350 sq. miles of EFH reopenings. This was not an easy task as they conducted over 30 meetings coastwide, met with more than 60 active trawl fishermen, and had dozens of one-on-one conversations discussing in detail nearly 150 discrete areas for closure, reopening, or modification. Moreover, the MTC utilized the knowledge of fishermen and spent a lot of time on their proposal which compliments the Collaborative with an additional 100 sq. miles of carefully thought out EFH closures.

[1] MSA Sec.2(a)(9)

In closing, we urge the Council to adopt a combination of Alternatives 1.a, 1.c, 1.f, 2.a, and No Action Alternative Subject Area 3 at this April meeting. The end result, if approved, would be additional 1,200 sq. miles of permanent protection for sensitive habitat combined with significant restored opportunity for fishermen. Such an outcome could serve as an example of how collaboration and unique partnerships can lead to win-win outcomes that comport with the true spirit of the Magnuson-Stevens Act.

Thank you for your consideration.

RE: Agenda Item F.3: Groundfish FMP Amendment 28 Final Preferred Alternatives

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members,

Thank you for considering the following comments regarding proposed modifications to habitat protections in Amendment 28 to the Groundfish Fishery Management Plan ("FMP"). Amendment 28 offers an important opportunity to fulfill the Council's duties to protect and enhance unique, sensitive, and important marine habitats. We look forward to the Council moving ahead with updating Essential Fish Habitat ("EFH") designations and establishing additional protections to protect sensitive, diverse habitats, as well as designating additional deep water habitat areas that will be protected from trawling and other bottom-contacting gear. We ask that the Council select a final preferred alternative ("FPA") that accomplishes the following:

- Includes Alternative 3.a, the closure of waters deeper than 3,500 meters to bottom-contact fishing gear using the Council's discretionary authorities.
- Includes the Comprehensive Conservation Proposal (Oceana et. al. 2013, as modified in November 2016) to create a new bottom trawl EFH Closed Area ("EFHCA") for the portion of the Southern California Bight currently not subject to trawl effort.
- Creates new or expanded bottom trawl EFHCA's of sufficient size, quality, diversity, and geographical distribution to ensure a net increase in effective protections for benthic habitat, when balanced against any re-openings of existing EFHCA's or the RCA.
- Protects sensitive and/or priority habitats.
- Addresses the importance of methane seep habitats to groundfish and the broader marine ecosystem by including them in the revised description of groundfish EFH in Appendix B of the FMP, and by protecting known seeps within EFHCA's.
- Ensures that any decisions to reopen EFH or RCA areas currently closed to bottom trawling are supported by robust information clearly demonstrating that the current protective measures are no longer required and/or the reopening will not have adverse impacts on sensitive habitats or species.

The Final Preferred Alternative Must Increase Net Effective Protection for Habitat

We understand that the Council has numerous decisions to make regarding the precise areas to include in its revised EFH designation. The MSA provides some important requirements to guide that decision-making process. Overall, the MSA requires fishery managers to enhance the amount and quality of EFH by protecting healthy habitats and restoring previously damaged habitats. Thus, the Council must ensure that whatever combination of specific areas or measures it chooses achieves a significant net gain in protections for EFH, including diverse benthic habitats, as well as unfished and recovered habitat areas. To that end, we agree with the basic assumption articulated in the Preliminary Draft Environmental Impact Statement for Amendment 28 (March 20, 2018) that measures that achieve a net gain in spatial extent of protections will be viewed as positive, though we also emphasize that net gain must also be viewed in terms of the sensitivity, diversity, and importance of the habitat areas.

In adding the EFH requirement to the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act ("MSA"), Congress recognized that "[o]ne of the greatest long-term threats to the viability of commercial and recreational fisheries is the continuing loss of marine, estuarine, and other aquatic habitats. Habitat considerations should receive increased attention for the conservation and management of fishery resources of the United States." 16 U.S.C. § 1801(a)(9); see also id. § 1801(a)(2) (recognizing that direct and indirect damage to habitat diminishes the capacity to support fishing). Congress required that every FMP "describe and identify essential fish habitat" and "minimize to the extent practicable adverse effects on such habitat caused by fishing," while also identifying "other actions to encourage the conservation and enhancement of such habitat." 16 U.S.C. §§ 1801(9), 1853(a)(7). The MSA therefore requires three categories of actions with respect to EFH: (1) designating EFH; (2) minimizing harmful fishing impacts to EFH; (3) actively protecting and enhancing EFH.

To protect EFH, Councils are required to "prevent, mitigate, or minimize any adverse effects from fishing, to the extent practicable, if there is evidence that a fishing activity adversely affects EFH in a manner that is more than minimal and not temporary in nature." Id. § 600.815(a)(2)(ii). Adverse effects mean "any impact that reduces quality and/or quality of EFH," and may include "direct or indirect physical, chemical, or biological alterations of the waters or substrate and loss of, or injury to, benthic organisms, prey species and their habitat, and other ecosystem components, if such modifications reduce the quality and/or quantity of EFH." Id. § 600.810(a).

Importantly, Congress recognized that the identification and conservation of EFH would be an ongoing process. As scientific knowledge of fish species, their biological needs, habitat usage, and new information on adverse impacts advances, EFH designations and conservation must be updated to reflect that understanding. 16 U.S.C. § 1855(b)(1)(A) (requiring Secretary of Commerce, acting through the National Marine Fisheries Service ("NMFS") to review and update EFH designations "based on new scientific evidence or other relevant information."); 50 C.F.R. § 600.815(a)(10). Like all conservation and management measures promulgated pursuant to the MSA, EFH identifications and revisions must be based on the best available science. 16 U.S.C. § 1851(a)(2). NMFS regulations echo this requirement, calling on Councils to obtain EFH information from "best available sources," including peer-reviewed literature and unpublished scientific reports, among others, and to "interpret [EFH] information in a risk-averse fashion to ensure adequate areas are identified as EFH for managed species." 50 C.F.R. § 600.815(a)(1)(iv). This provision is particularly instructive for the Council's consideration of re-opening some EFHCA areas. In order to ensure that Amendment 28 ultimately enhances EFH and protects sensitive habitats from fishing-related damage, the Council must require robust, reliable scientific evidence demonstrating that any re-opening of EFHCAs will not adversely affect sensitive habitats or species within those areas. If the scientific information concerning the potential impacts of re-opening an EFHCA are uncertain, the Council should apply a risk-averse approach and retain the closure.

The MSA's EFH provisions are meant to foster a proactive approach to protecting and enhancing fish habitat. See, e.g., H.R. Rep. 104-171 at 30-31 (expressing Congress' intent in the 1996 Sustainable Fisheries Act "to encourage the Councils to take a proactive approach to limiting gear types that may harm fisheries or essential fishery habitat or increase bycatch"). The MSA and implementing regulations also contemplate continued efforts to minimize any adverse effects from fishing on all areas of EFH:

> Councils must act to prevent, mitigate, or minimize any adverse effects from fishing, to the extent practicable, if there is evidence that a fishing activity adversely affects EFH in a manner that is more than minimal and not temporary in nature…. In such cases, FMPs should identify a range of potential new actions that could be taken to address adverse effects on EFH, include an analysis of the practicability of potential new actions, and adopt any new measures that are necessary and practicable. Amendments to the FMP or to its implementing regulations must ensure that the FMP continues to minimize to the extent practicable adverse effects on EFH caused by fishing.

50 C.F.R. § 600.815(a)(2)(ii) (emphasis added). These regulations should also be read in the context of the Magnuson-Stevens Act's call for actions that not only protect EFH from harm, but enhance the quality of EFH. This aspect of the EFH provision further highlights Congress' intent that EFH identifications and protections be implemented in a conservation-oriented, forward-looking way based on evolving information.

According to NMFS regulations, determining the practicability of minimizing adverse effects to EFH involves consideration of "the nature and extent of the adverse effect on EFH and the long and short-term costs and benefits of potential management measures to EFH, associated fisheries, and the nation, consistent with National Standard 7." 50 C.F.R. 600.815(a)(2)(iii). National Standard 7 states that "[c]onservation and management measures shall, where practicable, minimize costs and avoid unnecessary duplication." 16 U.S.C. § 1851(a)(7). Importantly, any conservation and management measures, including EFH decisions, must first satisfy MSA conservation goals before costs may be factored into the decision. In examining a claim involving National Standard 7, the D.C. District Court explained:

> Explicit in both the statutory text and the implementing regulations is Congress's intent that conservation efforts remain the Secretary's priority, and that a focus on the economic consequences of regulations not subordinate this principal goal of > the MSA. Hence, "[i]t is only when two different plans achieve similar conservation measures that the [NMFS] takes into consideration adverse economic consequences."

N. Carolina Fisheries Ass'n, Inc. v. Gutierrez, 518 F. Supp. 2d 62, 91-92 (D.D.C. 2007), quoting Natural Res. Defense Council, Inc. v. Daley, 209 F.3d 747, 753 (D.C. Cir. 2000). See also Connecticut v. Daley, 53 F. Supp. 2d 147, 172-73 (D. Conn. 1999), aff'd sub nom. Connecticut v. U.S. Dep't of Commerce, 204 F.3d 413 (2d Cir. 2000) ("the language of National Standard Seven provides that costs should be minimized and duplication avoided where practicable, not absolutely").

Similarly, in developing a FPA, the Council must determine which measures would provide the net effective improvement in habitat protection, in terms of protecting new habitat areas and restoring degraded habitat, required by the MSA. If the Council were to identify two different sets of measures that achieved similar increases in conservation benefit it might then consider which one costs less.

The Council must be especially careful in examining any proposed re-openings of currently protected areas to ensure that the best available science shows that allowing such re-openings would achieve an effective net gain in EFH protection, particularly when analyzed in the context of the proposed RCA reopening. As required in EFH regulations, the Council must prevent, minimize, and mitigate damage caused by fishing to designated EFH, in addition to examining new areas for designation. 50 C.F.R. § 600.815(a)(2)(ii). Therefore, in order to reopen areas to fishing, the Council must demonstrate, based on the best available science, that doing so will not result in adverse effects to groundfish EFH.

The Council's FPA Should Include Protections for Additional Important Habitat Types

In addition to protecting traditional hard bottom habitat, such as rocky bottom and corals, the Council should protect other important habitats, such as methane seeps. Methane seeps are areas where hydrocarbons are released from the ocean floor, feeding microbes that produce a calcium carbonate "pavement," that in turn provides crucial substrate for corals and sponges. In addition to literally paving the way for the growth of groundfish habitat, methane seeps play a critical role in capturing greenhouse gases and preventing them from escaping through the water column and contributing to further climate change. See 50 C.F.R. 600.815(a)(5) (directing fishery managers to consider cumulative impacts with respect to climate change when designating EFH). Protecting these seep areas from trawling would prevent significant harm to their role in building important habitat and capturing greenhouse gases. In addition, designating these areas as EFH would ensure that impacts from non-fishing activities were addressed through the EFH consultation process. See 16 U.S.C. § 1855(b)(2) (EFH consultation requirement).

The FPA Should Include Using Discretionary Authority under the MSA to Close Waters Deeper than 3,500m to Bottom-Contacting Gear

We encourage the Council to retain its Preliminary Preferred Alternative of closing waters deep than 3,500m to bottom-contacting gear (Alternative 3.a) in the FPA. As noted in the Preliminary Draft Environmental Impact Statement, the Council has authority to establish this measure under several provisions of the MSA. These include Section 303(b)(2)(A), which allows the Council to designate zones where and time periods when fishing will be limited or prohibited, or only specified types of gear will be permitted, 16 U.S.C. § 1853(b)(2)(A); Section 303(b)(2)(B), which allows the Council to designate zones where fishing will be limited or prohibited specifically to protect deep corals from fishing gear, 16 U.S.C. § 1853(b)(2)(B); and Section 303(b)(12), which allows the Council to "include management measures in the plan to conserve target and non-target species and habitats, considering the variety of ecological factors affecting fishery populations," 16 U.S.C. § 1853(b)(12).

Thank you for your continued work on Amendment 28 and the thoughtful, ecosystem-oriented approach you have taken thus far. We look forward to the completion of an updated package of habitat designations that will improve and expand protections for important areas while maintaining fishing opportunity. RE: Agenda Item F.3 EFH and RCA Amendment 28- Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council members:

Thank you for your commitment to protecting Essential Fish Habitat (EFH)—including coral gardens, sponge beds, rocky reefs, and underwater canyons—off the U.S. West Coast from the adverse effects of bottom trawling. Protecting EFH is necessary to maintain and increase groundfish populations, support non-commercial marine life, and drive healthy coastal communities. Our organization supports Alternative 1b, which would yield the greatest benefit for continued productive groundfish fisheries and advance a precautionary approach to protecting fragile and diverse seafloor habitats. We also support Alternative 3a to protect deep water habitat within the Excusive Economic Zone (EEZ).

The negative effects of bottom trawling are well documented in scientific literature. Bottom trawls can topple, crush, and damage slow-growing corals and sponges which provide shelter, nursery and feeding grounds for commercially important rockfish, lingcod, sablefish, flatfishes, and others. This biogenic habitat is critical to a healthy and productive ocean ecosystem and sustainable West Coast fisheries. In particular, we support the protections in Alternative 1b that would prevent expansion of bottom trawling in the Southern California Bight—waters stretching from Point Conception to the U.S./Mexico border— until the area can be further researched, protecting pristine seafloor habitats that host high numbers of important corals and sponges. In addition, Alternative 1b protects a network of newly discovered bamboo coral forests, Christmas tree corals, sponge beds, methane seeps, and rocky reefs at important areas like Heceta Bank, Mendocino Ridge, Southern Oregon, and within California's National Marine Sanctuaries.

We urge the Council to adopt a precautionary approach not only regarding the designation of new EFH conservation areas, but also when considering proposed openings of existing EFH conservation areas and Rockfish Conservation Areas. Re-opening currently protected areas of the seafloor to bottom trawl fishing should be dependent upon new scientific data showing minimal impacts to EFH. Alternative 1b incorporates this precautionary approach, while minimizing any potential displaced bottom trawl fishing from current fishing grounds based on available recent fishing effort data provided by the National Marine Fisheries Service. We also support the Council's preliminary preferred Alternative 3a, to protect all waters deeper than 3,500 meters from bottom trawling in the Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ).

Given the current opportunity to make substantial conservation gains in protecting EFH to the benefit of groundfish fisheries while also increasing overall fishing opportunities, we support Council action to select Alternative 1b as a final preferred alternative along with Alternative 3a to close deep waters in the EEZ.

RE: Agenda Item F.3: Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) Amendment 28 – Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

Ocean Conservancy greatly appreciates efforts by the Council, NOAA Fisheries, the EFH Collaborative, and other stakeholders to develop and implement a robust and science-driven EFH process. The amount and quality of analysis corresponds with the importance of this amendment and of our West Coast fish habitat. In regards to each of the three Subject Areas being considered as part of Amendment 28, we recommend that the Council:

1. Adopt the EFH Collaborative proposal with three important modifications from the Oceana et al. proposal
2. Remove the trawl RCA
3. Close waters deeper than 3,500m to bottom trawling

These actions when taken together will help best meet conservation and economic goals.

Subject Area 1: Collaborative Alternative (Alternative 1.a) with improvements from the Oceana et al. proposal (Alternative 1.b)
The EFH Collaborative Proposal represents the results of a successful collaboration between conservation and industry representatives. This process took a "win-win" approach that was intended to maximize fishing opportunities while ensuring conservation of vital seafloor habitats. We believe that Alternative 1.a forms a suitable base, but would benefit from some additional modifications to increase its efficacy. While the Collaborative alternative would protect many important reefs and known deep-sea coral habitat areas, it would also open some existing EFH conservation areas to bottom trawling. We are concerned these proposed openings will result in adverse impacts on important high value habitat areas. Further, these openings may not be necessary for full attainment of annual catch limits, especially when also opening the trawl RCA (Alternative 2.a).

Southern California Bight (Alternative 1.b)
The Southern California Bight is highly biologically diverse. Many offshore islands and banks create unique physical conditions that support high abundance and diversity of biogenic habitats. These banks are also highly valuable for recreational fishing. Thousands of coral and sponge colonies are documented, and the area includes over 800 square miles of known hard substrate. We recommend that the offshore area is closed to bottom trawling beyond the current trawl footprint. This will ensure that fishing can continue as it does today in the nearshore, but that the most vulnerable areas are closed to bottom trawling until further consideration.

Heceta Bank & Heceta Bank West (Alternative 1.b)
Heceta Bank, located offshore central Oregon, is the largest contiguous rocky reef complex in the U.S. EEZ north of Cape Mendocino. It is essential to groundfish for feeding, breeding and growth to maturity, and is a hotspot for overfished yelloweye rockfish and for pelagic birds and marine mammals. We recommend that the Council expand the existing EFH closure at Heceta Bank to recognize the value of this area. An expanded closure will protect important sponges and corals and protect important habitat critical to targeted groundfish stocks. The proposed Heceta Bank and Heceta Bank West areas in Alternative 1b protect the full extent of this reef complex while avoiding impacts to the bottom trawl fishery.

Hydrate Ridge (Alternative 1.b)
Hydrate ridge offshore the central Oregon coast has long been recognized for its unique methane-driven marine biological communities. This large offshore ridge rises up over 600 meters from the surrounding deep-sea. The ridge is known to have hard rocky substrate and scientists have made hundreds of observations of coral and sponge including black corals, gorgonian corals and glass sponges. The area is unique, biologically diverse and can be protected without impacting the groundfish bottom trawl fishery. We recommend that Hydrate ridge be protected.

Subject Area 2: Remove the trawl RCA (Alternative 2.a)
Assuming continuation of a scientifically-driven EFH process that provides adequate protection for needed habitat, the RCA is no longer required. While some stocks are still rebuilding, the groundfish FMP no longer has any stocks below the overfished threshold, and it is easier for managers and stakeholders to consider geographically protected areas in a single process.

Subject Area 3: Close waters deeper than 3,500m to bottom trawling (Alternative 3.a)
We recommend that the Council close waters deeper than 3,500m to bottom trawling per its Preliminary Preferred Alternative in April 2017. While no fishing currently takes place in these waters, the value of this habitat is high. The area contains hundreds of coral and sponge species that are not only valuable to the larger oceanic ecosystem, but are sensitive to physical disruption.

In closing, we greatly appreciate the effort put in by all parties to make this a science-driven process that maximizes both conservation and economic benefits. Protection of important ocean habitat is not only paramount for sustainable fisheries today, but helps maintain a thriving and productive ocean for all into the future.

Sincerely,

Corey Ridings

Mr. Phil Anderson, Chair
Pacific Fishery Management Council
7700 NE Ambassador Place, #101
Portland, OR 97220

Dear Mr. Anderson and Council Members:

Marine Conservation Institute recognizes the need to protect deep-sea corals and other sensitive benthic habitats in Pacific waters. Deep-sea corals and sponges create vital habitat for fish and invertebrates, supporting high levels of biodiversity in the deep sea. These habitats are highly sensitive to disturbance – including physical damage from benthic fishing gear – and recover extremely slowly once injured. We are therefore highly supportive of any actions that further protect these sensitive communities, and are thankful for the opportunity to provide comments on the final action on Amendment 28 to the West Coast Groundfish Fishery Management Plan. Specifically, we support Alternative 1b, which would yield the greatest benefit for continued productive groundfish fisheries and advance a precautionary approach to protecting fragile and diverse seafloor habitats, and Alternative 3a to protect deep water habitat.

Cold-water corals and sponges are critical foundation species in the deep-sea. These organisms provide vital ecological services including the creation of complex habitat structures, the alteration of local hydrodynamic conditions, carbon sequestration, and nutrient and carbon cycling (Cordes et al. 2008; Mienis et al. 2009). As a result, deep-sea coral and sponge communities house a large diversity of associated organisms (Roberts et al. 2006) and act as important habitats and nurseries for commercially important fish and invertebrates (Baillon et al. 2012). The extreme longevity and slow growth rate of these taxa, coupled with limited dispersal ability and low reproductive outputs (Roberts et al. 2009), makes it difficult or even impossible for these communities to fully recover after significant disturbance.

Cold seeps, ecosystems that rely on the flow of methane and other hydrocarbons from the seafloor, support unique assemblages of marine life. These recently discovered ecosystems have the potential to revolutionize our understanding of the origin of life on Earth and other planets, and may provide key advances through the discovery of extremophile organisms, previously unknown enzymes, and new metabolic processes. Many of the organisms that thrive at cold seeps – such as vestimentiferan tubeworms and chemosynthetic mussels – are not found in any other environments. These organisms are also extremely long-lived, with some individuals estimated to be over 300 years old (Durkin et al. 2017). Cold seeps support a number of associated species, including corals (Quattrini et al. 2013) and fish (Grupe et al. 2015), and the natural succession of seeps gives rise to hard surfaces which form the basis of extensive cold-water coral communities.

Deep-sea ecosystems are increasingly threatened by a number of stressors ranging from ongoing and projected climate change (Mora et al. 2013), oil and natural gas extraction (Fisher et al. 2014), seafloor mining (Boetius and Haeckel 2018) and fishing. Some of the largest documented damages to benthic habitats have occurred as the result of bottom trawl fisheries (Pusceddu et al. 2014), which cause extensive physical damage to benthic environments. Bottom trawls were found to have severely damaged 30-50% of cold-water coral reef structures in some regions (Fosså et al. 2002), and considerably reduce the richness, diversity, and abundance of deep-sea communities (Cryer et al. 2002). In addition to direct physical damage, trawling resuspends sediments that smothers benthic filter feeders even outside of the trawled area (Palanques et al. 2001).

Federal waters off the U.S. West Coast house extensive mapped distributions of cold-water coral and sponge habitats (Hourigan et al. 2017), as well as a large number of known cold seeps (Seabrook et al. in press). Given that less than 0.0001% of the deep sea has been directly surveyed (Gjerde et al. 2006), it is likely that widespread, undiscovered coral, sponge, and seep habitats exist as well (see Guinotte and Davies (2014) for a full modeling analysis). Given the clear ecological importance of these ecosystems, we urge the Council to secure additional protections and to adopt a more precautionary approach to disrupting these fragile habitats.

In addition to our support for alternatives 1b and 3a, we would like to highlight these additional conservation concerns:

Marine Conservation Institute strongly believes that the existing Rockfish Conservation Areas (RCAs) should be extensively surveyed by video prior to resuming any trawling. The biogenic habitats supporting rockfish are highly vulnerable to disturbance and are extremely slow to recover. After roughly 10 years of closure there is a unique opportunity to examine areas for coral and sponge recovery. Video surveys would enable an in-depth scientific baseline assessment of 1) the recruitment of cold-water corals and sponges within RCAs, and 2) the extent of existing disturbance.

We also want to highlight the Southern California Bight (SCB) trawl closure for protection. Offshore habitats in the SCB encompass a wide range of habitats including rocky banks, seamounts, and canyons that support a highly productive and diverse ecosystem due in part to the upwelling of cold, nutrient enriched waters. In addition to a broad array of benthic organisms, the SCB is home to migratory whales, sharks, and provides the breeding grounds for California sea lions.

Protection within Cordell Bank and the Greater Farallones National Marine Sanctuaries, 'The Football', Gobbler's Knob, Rittenberg Bank, Cochrane Bank and other rocky habitat areas found within these sanctuaries. Newer information has highlighted biodiversity hotspots in these areas, for example 'The Football' region features rocky terrain that supports a large diversity of cold-water corals and sponges that provide crucial nursery habitat for skates, sharks, and demersal fish (NOAA 2018). Increased protection within the Sanctuaries will also help support expanded research and monitoring efforts of these habitats and the species found there.

Finally, we urge the Council to close known cold seep habitats to bottom trawling. Seep communities were only discovered within the past 40 years, yet we are already risking the wholesale destruction of these fragile habitats. Seep habitats are generally small, and their protection should not represent a significant tradeoff for fisheries. Due to the unique assemblage of species found in cold seeps, their potential importance for supporting groundfish populations, and their role in creating coral and sponge habitat, we believe that it is critical to adopt strong protections for these fragile habitats before they are significantly damaged by trawling activity.

Marine Conservation Institute strongly encourages the Council to adopt an amendment that will confer the strongest protection possible for deep-sea coral and cold seep habitats throughout the U.S. West Coast. Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this important issue.

Sincerely,

Lance Morgan, PhD

RE: Scientists statement on Groundfish FMP Amendment 28 Final Preferred Alternatives (public comment for agenda item F.3)

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

Many of the undersigned scientists wrote to the Council in September of 2015[1] in support of closing valuable and vulnerable seafloor habitat deeper than 3,500 meters to bottom trawl gear. We appreciate your decision at that time to include such protection in Amendment 28 (Am 28) to the West Coast Groundfish Fishery Management Plan (FMP), as well as your subsequent decisions to identify the closure of water deeper than 3,500 meters to all bottom-contacting gear as a Preliminary Preferred Alternative (PPA). Now, as you consider final action on Am 28, we and the additional scientists below write to encourage you to adopt Alternative 3(a), the bottom-contact closure of areas deeper than 3,500 meters, as a Final Preferred Alternative (FPA). In addition, due to recent discoveries of abundant methane seep habitats throughout the margin, and our increased understanding of their importance to groundfish and the larger ecosystem, we encourage the Council to recognize and protect methane seeps through Am 28. Inclusion of methane seeps in revisions to the description of groundfish Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and protection of the un-trawled portion of the Southern California Bight and other areas known to contain seep habitats through EFH Conservation Areas are two key components we hope you will include in the FPA.

The deep sea, including areas deeper than 3,500 meters now under consideration for protection by the Council, is critical to humanity and the health of the global oceans. The deep sea provides a host of benefits to society including trapping greenhouse gases, slowing the rate at which our climate changes and regenerating nutrients that are ultimately upwelled back to the surface to fuel fisheries, including those of the U.S. west coast. The importance of the deep sea to society is the subject of increasing focus at both national and international scales: recent publications have explored the growing anthropogenic threats to deep-sea structure and function (including fisheries, mining, and climate change) and the need to protect these environments (for example Cordes and Levin 2018, Niner et al. 2018; Van Dover et al. 2018; Danovaro et al. 2017; Le et al.

[1] See Pacific Fishery Management Council, September 2015 Briefing Book Agenda Item H.8.b Supplemental Public Comment 6, letter from Thurber et. al.

2017; Davies et al. 2017; Levin and Le Bris 2015; Aanesen et al. 2015; Armstrong et al. 2010; Grehan et al 2009).

In our previous letter, which we include here for reference, we explored the value and vulnerability of the deep sea in detail, in support of the proposal to protect it from fishing gear impacts. Here we highlight a few key elements of that letter with a focus on new information that has emerged since 2015:

The deep sea off of the West Coast supports a variety of habitats with fauna that are vulnerable to disturbance and which are critical to the ecosystem services provided by the deep sea. Within the Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) of the US West Coast there are important regional habitats that inject structural and biological diversity, such as seamounts, canyons, hydrothermal vents and methane seeps. In many cases we are constantly discovering new locations of these habitats and are just beginning to appreciate their role in the ocean ecosystem. For example, in just the past two years, rich sponge reefs, cold water coral thickets, and an abundance of methane seeps have been either discovered or visited for the first time throughout the US West Coast's EEZ. These discoveries are not limited to one region but stretch from northern Washington to southern California (Seabrook et al. 2017; Grupe et al. 2015); the rate of discovery is limited by resources rather than lack of habitats to discover.

Deep-sea habitats are vulnerable to disturbance with impacts that can last decades. While there is much that remains to be discovered in the deep sea, the susceptibility of these habitats to negative anthropogenic impact is becoming increasingly clear. Cold-water corals can live for thousands of years if undisturbed (Roark et al. 2009) and coral communities that have been impacted by trawling have 3 fold less diversity and density of fauna present compared to those that have not been disturbed (Althaus et al. 2009). Deep-sea sponges have age estimates that range from 400 (Fallon et al. 2010) to 18,000 years (Jochum et al. 2017). Even deep-sea sediment, an epicenter of nutrient regeneration, is slow to recover from disturbance. Across seven sites at depths similar to those under consideration for protection by the Council, seafloor disturbances impacted the animal community for more than 20 years (Jones et al. 2017). While this study by Jones et al. focused on more extreme disturbance than trawling, trawling been shown to reduce biodiversity in the deep sea (Pusceddu et al. 2014) and biodiversity loss can cause an exponential loss of function in deep-sea habitats (Danovaro et al. 2008).

The deep sea remains largely unexplored, makes up a significant component of federally managed waters, and is a location where relevant discoveries are a common occurrence. More than 95% of the deep sea remains unexplored and more than 85% of the United States EEZ is considered deep sea (Bureau of Ocean Energy Management). The unknown nature of much of these vast habitats means that new information is steadily accumulating, including information that is relevant to management. For instance, at the time of our last letter to the Council in September 2015, approximately 1,500 coral and sponge observations were on record in the US West Coast EEZ beyond 3,500 meters depth. Today, just under three years later, NOAA's Deep Sea Coral Research and Technology database contains over 7,500 observations in the same area, a five-fold increase (NOAA, 2018).

There is growing awareness of the importance of methane seeps. We also appreciate the Council's efforts to recognize and address the importance of methane seeps (also known as cold seeps) and their associated biological communities as an important component of groundfish habitat and for their critical contribution to ecosystem structure and function. Methane seeps are areas where energy from the seafloor is harnessed through chemosynthesis, augmenting production from the surface ocean. We appreciate your decision in November of 2016 to revise Appendix B of the FMP (the description of groundfish EFH) to include methane seeps and we urge that you include this in the FPA. Where practicable, we also encourage you to protect seep habitats in the FPA by closing known seeps to bottom trawling through the creation of new EFH Conservation Areas, such as Oceana's proposed closure of unfished areas in the Southern California Bight, an area that is also rich in Am 28 priority habitats such as rocky substrate, submarine canyons and gullies, and structure-forming invertebrates like corals and sponges. Finally, we understand that there are newly discovered seeps in a number of areas that are currently within EFH Conservation Areas, but that are proposed for re-opening. The presence of these sensitive habitats should preclude re-openings. For further information we refer you to a letter submitted in November 2016 by Dr. Andrew Thurber and Dr. Ben Grupe, included here for reference, which provided detail on some of these specific areas.[2]

The steady stream of new information extends to these methane seep habitats as well, habitats whose importance to the ocean and society is just beginning to be fully understood (Levin et al. 2016). Just off the coast of Oregon and Washington, more than 700 new methane seeps have been discovered over the past five years[3]. These habitats include slow-growing, long-lived species like Vestimeniferan tubeworms which, like cold water corals and sponges, live for hundreds of years (Cordes et al. 2007; Durkin et al. 2017) and greatly impact the community present (Bergquist et al. 2003; Cordes et al. 2009). This group of animals was largely unknown from the region prior to these recent discoveries (Seabrook et al. 2017). In addition, the microbial activity at seep habitats deposits hard substrate that in turn forms habitat for cold water corals and sponge reefs. Given the longstanding recognition of hard substrate as a key component of groundfish EFH, it is not surprising that researchers found an elevated abundance of groundfish (e.g. long spine thornyhead) around a recently discovered methane seep off Southern California (Grupe et. al. 2015).

In conclusion, we very much appreciate the Council's steady progress in applying an ecosystem-based approach to seafloor habitat protection and its management decisions in general. It is the consensus of the undersigned scientists that the large, precautionary closures of areas beyond 3,500 meters depth (to bottom contact gear) and of un-trawled areas in the Southern California Bight (to trawl gear), are consistent with ecosystem-based fishery management, are within the authority of the Magnuson-Stevens Act, and are scientifically defensible. We also hope that you will consider the importance of methane seeps in your selection of FPA's for Am 28, by including them in a revised description of groundfish EFH and considering them carefully in your selection of which closures and re-openings to include in the FPA inside 700 fathoms.

International Signatories: Many of the ecosystem services provided by the deep sea extend far beyond the jurisdictions of one country. While the stakeholders for the extractable resources in these areas are U.S.-based, the stakeholders for the regulating services provided by the deep sea are the global population. As the alternatives proposed here have ramifications far outside of the U.S. EEZ, we have included signatories from outside of the U.S. to show support for this letter.

RE: Scientists statement on habitat protection for waters beyond 3,500 meters (public comment for agenda item H.8)

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members,

We the undersigned 137 marine scientists write to request that you include an alternative for closing federally managed waters deeper than 3,500 meters to bottom trawl fishing gear in your upcoming habitat amendment to the Groundfish Fishery Management Plan (FMP). We appreciate the previous steps taken by the Pacific Fishery Management Council (Council) to protect unfished deepwater areas, including the existing bottom trawl closure of seabed between 1,280 meters and 3,500 meters water depth.[1] We also appreciate your past attempt to include waters deeper than 3,500 meters in this protective closure. [2] While that previous attempt was ultimately unsuccessful, new information on the area, a bolstered legal authority for habitat protection, and the current FMP amendment now provide another opportunity to protect this area.

Our scientific understanding of the area in question is still quite limited and yet we know that it has the paired attributes of value and vulnerability that justify protection. The deep sea is of critical importance to the global ecosystem and human society, providing a variety of services that support, provision and regulate everything from shallower-water productivity to the global climate.[3] An ecosystem-based approach to fisheries management (EBFM), which this Council has increasingly used in its decision-making, calls for recognizing the intrinsic value and vulnerability of these pristine deep-sea habitats and protecting them until the potential impacts of any human activity that might be authorized in the future are fully understood and addressed.

Deep-sea areas and their characteristics:

The deep sea, including the abyssal plain areas now under consideration for protection by the Council, is crucial to our lives and to the health of global oceans. The deep sea provides a host of important ecosystem functions and services. It helps reduce the impacts of anthropogenic carbon release by transporting, oxidizing and storing greenhouse gasses like carbon dioxide and methane.[4] It provides important natural resources to humans, from fish stocks to potential new medicine, mineral or energy resources.[5] Off the U.S. west coast, the upwelling that makes the California Current one of the most vibrant and productive marine ecosystems in the world is an example of deep-sea nutrient regeneration, where the bounty of the deep sea is brought back to the surface to fuel primary production and thus harvestable fish stocks.[6] Finally, the living marine habitat of the deep sea, including the corals found beyond 3,500 meters off California, are a crucial foundation of this important ecosystem. In fact, scientists refer to cold-water corals found on deep shelf, slope, and abyssal plain habitats as "ecosystem engineers" because of their role in creating habitats used by invertebrates and fish.[7]

The deep-sea floor can generally be divided into two broad zones: continental margins (~ 200 meters to 4,000 meters depth) and abyssal plains (generally dominated by soft sediments and found from ~ 4,000 meters to 6,000 meters depth).[8] Within these broad zones there are important regional habitats that inject additional structural and biological diversity, such as seamounts, canyons, hydrothermal vents and methane seeps. Combined, deep-sea ecosystems are the largest environment on Earth, with over 63% of the surface area of the globe found deeper than 200 meters. Marine life is similarly concentrated here: 50% of total marine benthic biomass is found below 3,000 meters.[9]

Unprotected seafloor deeper than 3,500 meters makes up ~ 40% of federally managed ocean waters in the Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) of the U.S. West Coast. This area is found off California south of the undersea feature known as the Mendocino Ridge. The diversity of habitats found in this region has long been recognized, for example the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Fisheries Service (NOAA Fisheries) describes this area as follows: "features that occur beyond 3500m include hydrothermal vents, soft-bottom sediments, and hard bottom areas with biogenic habitats such as deep sea corals."[10] While the presence of these features is recognized their location and abundance is still largely uncharted. For example, it is estimated that globally over 100,000 seamounts over one kilometer in height remain uncharted.[11]

Despite its vast size and importance as an ecosystem, the deep sea remains among the least known and understood environments on Earth. According to a National Research Council report, some estimates suggest that as much as 95 percent of the world ocean and 99 percent of the ocean floor are still unexplored.[12] This limited exploration presents fundamental and recognized challenges to sustainable management of extractive industries in the deep sea. For example NOAA's Deep-Sea Coral Research and Technology Program states that "Currently, it is impossible to ascertain the overall extent of deep coral communities, much less their condition or conservation status in U.S. waters, because so many of the deeper areas these communities inhabit have been explored incompletely or have not been explored at all."[13] The deep sea off the U.S. West Coast is no exception. NOAA Fisheries recently described the state of deep-sea habitat surveys in this area: "seabed habitat mapping has been conducted only over continental shelf and slope and inland seas, and coverage of those areas is very patchy across the West Coast. The abyssal plain and continental rise remain largely un-described for seabed type and extent."[14]

Despite the limits of our knowledge, we have learned enough to say that the deep-sea floor is a vibrant ecosystem whose biodiversity rivals that of coral reefs.[15] The deep-sea floor features extensive areas of living marine (biogenic) habitat, three dimensional structures created by organisms including corals and sponges. Deep-sea corals are fragile, bottom-dwelling animals that grow at depths greater than 50 meters with certain species capable of living for more than 4,000 years if undisturbed.[16] Throughout their extensive lives, deep-sea corals are thought to form essential fish habitat.[17] While we do not know the precise distribution of deep-sea corals off California, we do know they occur in the federally-managed waters deeper than 3,500 meters.[18]

While corals are obvious epicenters of biodiversity, much of the total deep-sea diversity is found living in or on mud. These are areas fueled by a steady but slow diet of falling "marine snow" (comprised of mucus, fecal matter, and body parts) with periodic and dramatic "feasts" of organic matter delivered quickly due to a bloom of marine creatures miles above on the surface.[19]

Occasionally larger food deposits occur, such as "whale falls" that bring an unexpected bounty of food to the deep sea and result in a unique community that can persist for a century.[20] Each of these deposits to the deep sea bring with them carbon from the atmosphere, helping to mitigate global climate variability. Concurrently, the activity of animals on the seafloor release the nutrients trapped in this deposited food so they may later fuel the phytoplankton that shallower water fisheries need to thrive.[21]

In addition to the supporting and regulating services that the deep-sea delivers, the mystery of the deep sea provides important cultural and historical services to society. Each new scientific expedition to the deep ocean floor yields new discoveries ranging from novel species, such as a carnivorous sponge found off California,[22] to entirely new habitats, such as new methane seeps found right offshore of San Diego in 2012.[23] In December 2014, deep-sea life made headlines all over the world when an expedition to the Mariana Trench set a new world record for the deepest observation of a living fish, an unidentified and possibly new species of snailfish filmed at 8,143 meters (26,872 feet).[24] Just this year off California, researchers from NOAA led a team that located and surveyed the wreck of the World War Two aircraft carrier USS Independence in water half a mile deep within the Gulf of the Farallones National Marine Sanctuary.[25]

These areas and the services they provide are not impervious to human impacts.[26] Climate change is expected to pervasively impact the functions of the deep sea in several ways as a result of ocean acidification, declining oxygen and productivity, and increasing temperature.[27] In addition to these global stressors, the deep sea and its ecosystem services are under increasing demand and pressure on multiple fronts, including fishing, hydrocarbon extraction, and mining.[28] NOAA Fisheries, discussing the seafloor beyond 3,500 meters off California, stated that "all or most of the deep sea environments are likely to be highly sensitive to impact, including very low levels of fishing effort (e.g. a single trawl), and have extended recovery times (over 7 years). Thus, they can be very sensitive to bottom trawling and would take a long time to recover from this impact."[29]

The aforementioned extensive lifespan of deep-sea corals is clearly irreconcilable with requirements in U.S. fisheries law to minimize adverse effects to essential fish habitat that are more than minimal and not temporary, as any fishing impacts cannot be considered temporary on human time scales.[30] The impacts of trawling on these communities has also been shown: deep-sea coral communities that have experienced trawling have a three-fold decrease in the diversity and density of fauna present.[31]Further, impacts such as this that result in biodiversity loss have been found to result in an exponential decline in the functions that occur in the deep sea.[32] There is little question that deep-sea habitats will be exposed to multiple human impacts in the coming decades with unknown ramifications to the ecosystem services they provide. However physical disturbance from extractive fishing practices, if it occurs, would likely exacerbate or overshadow these other stressors by modifying the structure and biodiversity of the deep.

Protecting pristine deep-sea floor is consistent with an ecosystem-based approach:

Almost twenty years ago, in its report to Congress, the Ecosystem Principles Advisory Panel (EPAP) articulated basic policies for implementing EBFM that included two key recommendations consistent with a precautionary bottom trawling closure beyond 3,500 meters: (1) proactively evaluate the effects of potential new fisheries in advance and (2) apply the precautionary approach.[33] Additionally, the EPAP further articulates the importance of habitat protection in its report for both target and non-target species.[34] More recently, over 200 scientists and policy experts developed a consensus statement on EBFM that highlighted scientific understanding of marine ecosystems and articulated the vision of the scientific community when it recommends ecosystem-based management for the ocean. This 2005 statement includes recommendations that bolster the case for protecting the abyssal plain areas off California now. In particular, the signatories to this statement include the following as one of nine key elements of marine ecosystem based management: "Require evidence that an action will not cause undue harm to ecosystem functioning before allowing that action to proceed."[35] They also articulate what it means to apply a precautionary approach, stating that "levels of precaution should be proportional to the amount of information available such that the less that is known about a system, the more precautionary management decisions should be."[36]

Conclusions

In light of the current lack of information on the remote seafloor beyond 3,500 meters, including the fact that corals and other biogenic habitat are known to exist there but are largely unmapped, it is clear that a precautionary closure is appropriate. The impacts of fishing there cannot be adequately estimated or analyzed at this time given current information, except to say that there would almost certainly be detrimental impacts.

Therefore it is the consensus of the undersigned scientists that protection of this valuable and vulnerable area is a sensible and scientifically defensible action. It is consistent with the best scientific information available and with an ecosystem based approach to management. We recognize and appreciate the past efforts of the Council to implement an ecosystem based approach and to protect important habitats, and we now encourage you to include alternatives to close waters beyond 3,500 meters to bottom trawling.

International Signatories: Many of the ecosystem services provided by the deep sea extend far beyond the jurisdictions of one country. While the stakeholders for the extractable resources in this area are U.S.-based, the stakeholders for the regulating services provided by the deep sea are the global population. As the alternative proposed here has ramifications far outside of the U.S. EEZ, we have included signatories from outside of the U.S. to show support for this letter.

RE: Agenda Item F.4

Dear Chair Pollard and Council Members,

We would like to commend the Council for its April 2016 identification of the deep-water bottom contact closure (>3500m) off of the Pacific Coast as a Preliminary Preferred Alternative (PPA) under Amendment 28 to the Groundfish Fishery Management Plan. This forward thinking and precautionary closure will protect pristine habitats that are inhabited by long-lived species and an ecosystem that is critical to the overall function of our planet and in part responsible for our productive surface oceans.

Now, as the Council turns its attention to PPA's for the Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) components of Amendment 28, we strongly encourage that methane seep habitats be included as a priority in the designation of new Essential Fish Habitat Closed Areas (EFHCA), including new EFHCA's in any areas of the RCA that are deemed too sensitive to re-open if the RCA itself is rescinded.

Methane seep habitats (also known as cold seeps) are areas where energy from the seafloor is harnessed to augment production from the surface ocean; it is estimated that 10% of the total energy that is used by deep-sea organisms come from such habitats (Levin et al. 2016 Frontiers in Marine Science http://dx.doi.org/10.3389). These areas provide essential services to mankind through their consumption and storage of greenhouse gases (Schrag et al. 2013 Science 339, 540-543) and their modification of the seafloor through the creation of hard substrate that is considered EFH. This hard substrate in turn is used by taxa that also provide refugia to groundfish (specifically cold-water corals and sponges), amplifying the habitat services provided by seeps. While concrete evidence is limited, provocative preliminary evidence does exist linking the activity of methane seep habitats to commercial fish species, including Council-managed groundfish.

Microbial processes at methane seeps consume methane, a potent greenhouse gas, and they also deposit rock. Methane is 25 times as effective as carbon dioxide at warming our atmosphere and exists in vast reservoirs in the marine environment, including large deposits on the west coast of the United States extending from Mexico to Canada. As a byproduct of methane consumption, carbonate rock is deposited creating hard substrate on the seafloor. Carbon dioxide from seawater is also captured by this carbonate rock, resulting in a potentially important carbon dioxide sink in the oceans (Schrag et al.

2013 Science 339, 540-543). The rock itself becomes an attachment point for cold-water corals, deep-water sponges, large anemones, and especially soft corals (Anthomastus spp.) on the NW Pacific coast. These 'background' taxa augment fauna that are dependent on the seep for their survival. Thus, seeps directly create habitat suitable for fauna identified as biogenic habitat and which are currently considered a priority in the design of new habitat conservation areas. Further, large worms called vestimentiferans are known to increase the biodiversity at seeps by creating three-dimensional habitat structure and releasing chemicals through their 'roots', increasing the rate at which carbonate rock forms. These taxa are long-lived species, with life spans estimated to be >100 years (Cordes et al. 2007 Marine Ecology 28, 160-168). Damage to these habitats and seep endemic species (including these long-lived worms) cannot be considered temporary on human time scales and they should be considered for protection under U.S. fisheries law.

The direct role of seeps on fish stocks is currently unknown but a variety of evidence from many regions suggests an important role for certain species. Recently discovered methane seeps off of Southern California had an elevated abundance of longspine thornyhead (Grupe et al. 2015 Marine Ecology 36, 91–108). Similar observations have been repeated at seeps all along the west coast (pers. observations). Off Chile, the Patagonian Toothfish is found in greater densities at seeps than other locations (Sellanes et al. 2012 Lat. Am. J. Aquat. Res. 40, 980–991) and aggregations of commercially exploited fish including Orange Roughy, Oreo, Sablefish, and Dover Sole (Bowden et al. 2013 PLoS ONE 8:e76869 ; Grupe et al. 2015 Marine Ecology 36, 91–108 ; Levin et al. 2016 Frontiers in Marine Science http://dx.doi.org/10.3389) are common at seep sites. In addition, dense aggregations of crabs, especially Grooved Tanner Crabs (Chionoecetes tanneri) are often found at seep environments. Grooved Tanner crabs are not commercially harvested, however it has periodically been considered as a harvestable stock and is closely related to other species of Tanner crabs that are the focus of fisheries. In addition, elasmobranchs have been shown to use seep habitats as a refugia for their egg capsules (Treude et al. 2011 Marine Ecology Progress Series 437, 175-181). Though methane seeps have yet to be conclusively linked to the distribution and health of fish stocks, it is an area of active research with evidence suggesting that seeps may act as an essential fish habitat for at least some species.

While the distribution of methane seeps remains largely unknown, recent cruises have found them in abundance in the depth strata under consideration for the EFH and RCA PPA's at this meeting. During the last two years as many as 700 new sites of seepage have been identified between Northern California and the Canadian border (Johnson et al. G^3 16:3825 ; NA-072 Nautilus Cruise Report: http://www.pmel.noaa.gov/eoi/pdfs/2016-PacificCoast-NA072-CruiseReport-hires.pdf). Most of these sites are identified at this time only as bubble plumes in the water column, but it should be noted that to date, Remotely Operated Vehicle (ROV) dives have reliably verified the presence of seafloor seeps in association with overlying bubble plumes. While there is debate on how many of these plumes should be lumped into one site (impacting the number of 'seeps' discovered), it is clear that seeps are a widespread and integral part of the California Current Ecosystem, including but not limited to the benthic habitat. Many of these new seep sites overlap with areas proposed for protection as new or expanded EFHCA's in Amendment 28. Others are in areas proposed for re-opening.

While many seeps likely remain to be discovered in the areas under consideration, we specifically would like to highlight the following sites that co-occur with dense plume fields and are likely hotspots of seep activity on the coast. In addition, during recent Cruises aboard the E/V Nautilus (NA-072 and NA-066 Nautilus Cruise Report: https://www.tos.org/oceanography/assets/images/content/29-1_supplement.pdf, pp 40-43) some of these sites were visited by an ROV allowing basic information to be gathered (observations from S. Seabrook, pers. com. And Grupe, pers. observation):

Gray's Canyon: This site has not been directly dived on, however it is an area of active seepage with many plumes found within the canyon. Some known plumes are currently protected by the existing EFHCA and others by the RCA, but some proposed alternatives would remove protections and others would expand them. We support the Oceana et al. proposal for an expansion of the EFHCA to the east, which would protect additional plumes, and we do not support re-opening parts of the current EFHCA to the west as proposed under the Collaborative alternative, which would expose currently protected plumes to fishing effort. In all cases, our recommendations are outside the Tribal Usual and Accustomed Areas, consistent with the Council's prior decision to limit the scope of Amendment 28 to exclude the U+A Areas.

Astoria Canyon: This site was recently dived on by the E/V Nautilus and abundant seep habitats and carbonate outcrops were found at 494m water depth. Sablefish were observed in addition to fauna known to typically inhabit seeps. This area had intense and active seepage and we support the expanded coverage of the MCI alternative, which would protect the areas where we know the most active seepage occurs.

Heceta Bank: Also an area of active seepage across a diversity of depth profiles, this habitat included vestimentiferan tube worms known to be long-lived ecosystem engineers (Cordes et al. 2003, Ecology Letters 6:212-219). Anemones were also observed growing on carbonate outcrops. We encourage the Council to include the westward expansion of the current EFHCA proposed by MCI and Oceana in the PPA.

Bandon High Spot: This area has living seep fauna and carbonates created by seep activity with active seep sites at 615m depth. It is among the most dense seeping areas recently discovered, with 19 areas counted as distinct 'seeps' and 48 separate bubble plumes rising from the seafloor (data from Susan Merle and Dr. Robert Embley, NOAA). This area is proposed to be closed to trawling under the MCI-proposed "Bandon High Spot West" polygon, and we encourage the Council to include this site in the PPA.

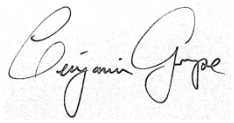

Southern California Bight: ROV dives off the coasts of San Diego, Palos Verdes, and Point Dume near Malibu, CA also discovered seep habitats of note. Off of Palos Verdes, carbonate mounds associated with methane seeps from 350-450m depth contained very dense numbers of thornyheads and crabs. A methane seep discovered at about 700-750m depth near Point Dume is particularly noteworthy, as it was measured to be over 1.4 km long and up to several hundred meters wide. This may be the largest methane seep known in United States Pacific waters and contained abundant catsharks, thornyheads, and Dover sole. As a result, we support the Oceana proposed closure of areas in this region not subject to trawl effort. This closure would protect a number of these documented seeps.

Trawling on seep habitats has a clear effect on the fauna that live there, although implications for large-scale cycles of methane and carbon have not been quantified. We do not know whether trawling leads to altered methane release from the sediment, however we have seen evidence that the growth orientation of vestimentiferan tubeworms shifts from upright to a lower growth form in areas with evidence of fishing (Baco et al. 2010 Marine Geology 272, 251-259). It is proposed that this impacts their efficacy as ecosystem engineers. Research on these tubeworms has occurred only in other regions. Until they were discovered at Heceta Bank seeps this year, they were not known to occur in the Pacific Northwest.

In just one cruise to the regions being discussed, over 500 new areas of seafloor seepage were observed, covering, in many cases, a single swatch of the seafloor along the 500m depth contour. We propose that those areas discovered with the greatest densities of seeps be included for consideration for protection from trawl fisheries under the Amendment 28 PPA. While the link between commercial fish production and seeps is unclear, their role in creating hard substrate for corals, anemones, and sponges, and the extreme longevity of some of their fauna makes them important considerations in the designation of conservation areas.

Sincerely,

Andrew Thurber, PhD

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

RE: Agenda Item: F3 Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and Rockfish Conservation Areas (RCA)

I am writing as a voice of Heirs To Our Oceans, a youth organization of kids worldwide who are trying to protect and save our oceans for us and future generations. We currently have well over one hundred youth committed to our Heirs program.

First of all, I would like to say that I am very grateful for the beautiful California coast I have grown up on. Without this Council, the fisheries off our coast could be in a detrimental situation. So I am thanking you for the steps that you have taken to protect the oceans that I along with your children and grandchildren will inherit.

We Heirs are very concerned about the effects of fishing practices that harm deep sea coral worldwide, including across the U.S. west coast, because of the biodiversity of the habitat these corals provide.

I am respectfully requesting that the PMFC consider these effects on deep sea coral and essential deep sea habitats and make a decision on the U.S. west coast that is in the best interest of my generation and future generations.

I have been looking at corals deeply for Heirs To Our Oceans for almost two years now. We Heirs each have one or more focus areas on human impacts on our oceans. My focus areas include threats to corals and derelict fishing gear.

Each Heir has mentors so we can ensure that our work is up to date and that it is credible. My mentors are Dr. Rebecca Albright, Dr. Erika Woolsey, and with regard to deep sea corals I turn to Dr. Peter Etnoyer for guidance. I am very excited to meet Dr. Ruth Gates next week!

Deep sea corals can be ancient. Living from 145 - 4000+ years! We cannot lose a 4 millenia old ecosystem. These deep sea corals live at 50m and below.[1] Many rockfish species live within that range as well.[2] In fact: 50% of total deep sea biomass lives below 3000 meters. I find that to be incredible and incredibly important.

Corals create habitat for groundfish and rockfish[3], but they can be harmed by fishing practices such as bottom trawling and even demersal fixed gears.

Groundfish are important because of the fisheries they support. The California Department of Fish and Wildlife states: "The commercial and recreational groundfish fisheries are managed to ensure long-term resource sustainability and economic, recreational, cultural and social benefits."[4] As rockfish are part of the groundfish group, it is doubly important to protect them and their habitat.

National Standard 2 of the Magnuson-Stevens Act states that "(2) Conservation and management measures shall be based on the best scientific information available." I strongly believe the best scientific information available on this topic right now is the paper I have referenced in footnote three: The 2017 State of Deep Sea Corals Report.

I would like to recommend closing off high biodiversity areas and areas dense in deep sea coral to bottom trawling. The effects of bottom trawling include:

- Changes in habitat and structure of trawled ecosystems.
- Reduced deep sea habitat diversity and productivity.
- Changes in organic matter for microbial food webs.
- Changes in species makeup.
- Less biodiversity.
- Increased susceptibility to other issues.

I would like to acknowledge that steps have been taken to protect the west coast from the effects of bottom trawling. I'm so grateful for that. We need to go deeper and "deeper" to better protect our ocean's natural resources, including all that gets lost or damaged through trawling. While removing bottom trawling from coastal and deep sea areas off California, Oregon, and Washington would eliminate much of the threat to deep sea coral, I understand that this would prevent some fishermen and women from making a living. But additional restrictions are necessary and appropriate for our generation considering the state of the oceans and the natural environment we will inherit. I, speaking on behalf of children everyone, therefore ask that you protect as much coral habitat as possible as you make a decision.

Another great action to take would be to close off as many known methane seeps to trawling as possible and to prevent bottom contact in waters deeper than 3,500 meters. Below this specific depth, the ecosystem makes up around 40% of the EEZ (Exclusive Economic Zone).

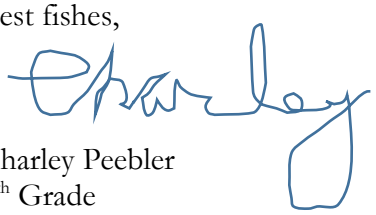

We also need proper surveillance of deep sea coral habitat so we are able to see which areas of the deep sea are highest in biodiversity.

Another solution I would like you to support is closing of un-trawled areas in the Southern California Bight, which is a unique ecological resource. Unfortunately, as you may know, the area is suffering from some of the heaviest pollutant inputs in the U.S. To allow the area to recover and/or be shielded from at least from one human impact such as trawling might give it an opportunity to build its resistance and become stable for my and future generations.

As you can see, protection of our ocean, waterways and life in them is important to me. My generation needs our planet's health, and our planet's health, therefore my health, depends on the health of our oceans, and the oceans depend on the balance of our marine ecosystems. If we can start these small changes, then the next generation can rest more comfortably believing that we and our children someday will have coral and fish and healthier lives.

RE: Agenda Item F.3 - Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) and Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) Amendment 28 - Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council Members:

Thank you for your past work to protect ocean habitat. As you consider final actions to revise the groundfish management plan, please select alternatives that establish a net increase in overall inshore habitat protection, close unfished areas of the Southern California Bight to bottom trawling, prioritize hydrocarbon seeps, and prevent bottom-contact fishing in waters deeper than 3,500 meters.

I support reopening areas that are demonstrably free of sensitive habitat, but vulnerable areas of rocky bottom, corals, and sponges within any long-standing closures must remain closed.

Please include specific protections for methane seeps and the vulnerable biological communities they support. The importance of these areas is just beginning to be understood, including the roles that seep-dependent organisms play in preventing greenhouse gases from entering the atmosphere and in creating coral habitat.

Finally, I ask that you create a new Essential Fish Habitat Conservation Area closed to bottom trawling for any areas in the Southern California Bight that are not subject to trawl effort now, as well as a bottom-contact closure for U.S. Pacific Ocean waters deeper than 3,500 meters.

These important measures can enhance marine habitats along the West Coast, ensure a sustainable supply of fish for commercial and recreational fisheries, and build a legacy we can pass to future generations.

Sincerely,

We the undersigned

RE: Agenda Item F.3 EFH and RCA Amendment 28- Final Action

Dear Mr. Anderson, Pacific Fishery Management Council Chair and Mr. Oliver, Assistant Administrator, NOAA Fisheries:

We, the undersigned 27,715 residents of the United States and U.S. Territories, write to express our concern for the future of the ocean's living seafloor. Priority seafloor habitats, like cold-water corals, sponges, rocky reefs and underwater canyons provide essential habitat for the reproduction, feeding, growth and shelter of many species of ocean life. This includes commercially and recreationally important fish such as rockfish as well as other species like sea stars and octopus. Bottom trawling poses the single greatest threat to seafloor habitats and, in turn, jeopardizes the greater health of the ocean ecosystem.

As you make a final determination on the conservation of essential fish habitat, you have the opportunity and responsibility to protect these resources, both for their intrinsic value and for the important benefit that these public resources provide us in return. Any changes to existing protection measures, including Rockfish Conservation Areas and Essential Fish Habitat Conservation Areas, should result in a net increase in protections for all habitat types, regionally and coast-wide. Furthermore, it would be irresponsible to reopen to bottom trawling any areas known to contain priority habitat features.

We urge you to adopt the essential fish habitat conservation alternative that is based on the proposal submitted by Oceana and others (Alterative 1b). Alternative 1b will increase the protection of seafloor habitats off the U.S. West Coast and keep open areas important for fisheries. We also urge you to adopt the protection of the deep-water habitat area off California (Alternative 3a). Protecting these important habitats will greatly benefit the ocean ecosystem and future generations, while maintaining vibrant and sustainable fisheries.

Sincerely,

27,715 residents of the United States and U.S. Territories, including 7,220 residents of California, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho.

RE: Agenda Item F.3: Groundfish Amendment 28, EFH-RCA Final Action

Dear Chair Anderson and Council members:

After reviewing the EFH Project Team Amendment 28 analysis for changes to groundfish essential fish habitat (EFH) and trawl rockfish conservation areas (RCA), we write to highlight key points in the analysis showing the combined effects of the EFH alternatives and trawl RCA removal. We are also attaching a series of comparative maps for your consideration.

We recommend the Council adopt Alternative 1b (Oceana et al). With adoption of Alt. 1b, we support with opening of the trawl Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) (Alt. 2a). What is more, we request the Council act to protect the deep-water ecosystem off California (Alt. 3a).

This suite of actions builds on the Council's precautionary approach to habitat conservation and it will protect sensitive and vulnerable seafloor habitats from bottom trawling. The habitats along the continental slope and shelf are essential for fish spawning, as juvenile fish nursery grounds, and for growth and feeding. Protecting these areas will help ensure vibrant and sustainable fisheries into the future. Furthermore, the deep-water ecosystem off California is a unique deep-sea environment well worth protecting from fishery impacts by using discretionary authorities under the Magnuson Stevens Act for protecting habitats, ecosystems, and deep-sea corals.

We wish to emphasize our strong support for adopting the Southern California Bight EFH Conservation Area in Alternative 1b. This precautionary closure will afford protections to both known and yet to be discovered living seafloor habitats that provide nursery grounds and complex structure supporting the productivity of this region's fisheries (See Figure 37). We appreciate the work by the California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW) to examine logbook data and historical catches in this region, which along with direct consultations with key fishing representatives, helped refine the shoreward boundary to maintain existing trawl grounds in federal waters used by the state-managed bottom trawl fleet (See Figure 38).

Based on available information and discussions, adopting the proposed Southern California Bight EFHCA would not negatively impact existing fisheries in the region. If there is interest in future trawling in the area proposed for protection, there is an established process through the Council's EFH 5-year review process to bring forward new information, and for the Council to consider reopening certain areas if new data indicates the seafloor impacts of trawling would be minimal. Furthermore, these protections are intended to only apply to bottom trawling, while continuing to allow and safeguard the important recreational and fixed gear commercial groundfish fisheries that have been fishing the Southern California Bight for decades.

Regarding waters north of Point Conception, California, we understand the Council may select elements from multiple EFH conservation area alternatives. While there are high value conservation areas in the Collaborative EFH Alternative (Alt. 1a), when combined with opening the trawl RCA (Alt. 2a), there would be a net loss in the protection of some priority habitat features coastwide as well as a net loss in particular biogeographic regions and depth zones.

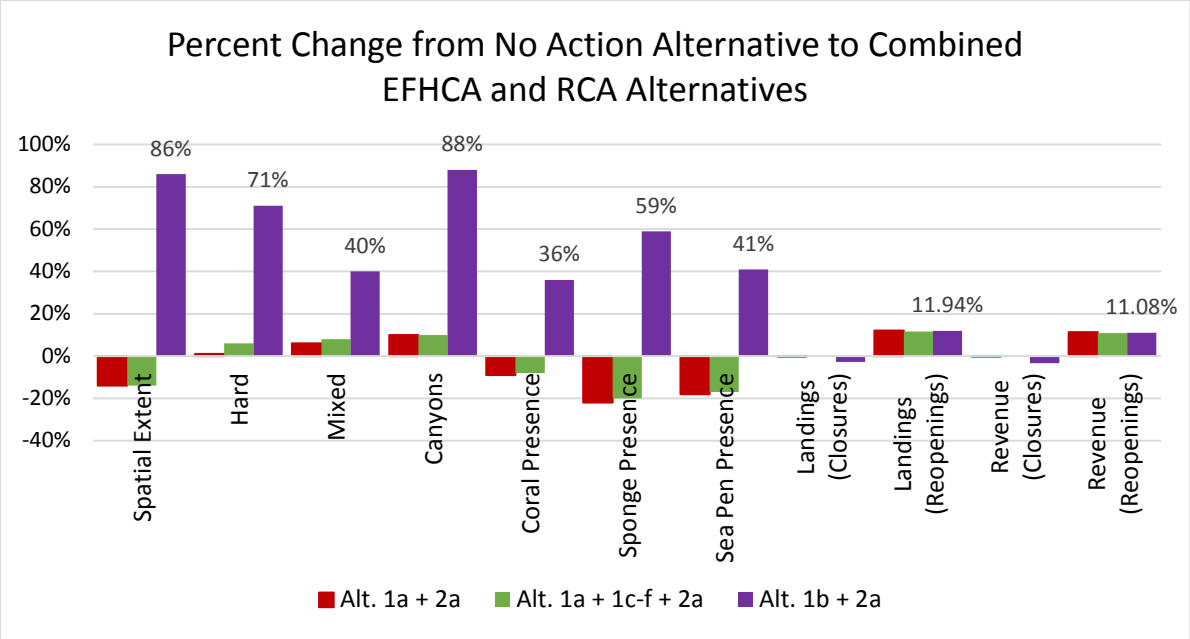

Chart. Percent change in coastwide spatial extent and priority habitats protected with adoption of the combined EFH and RCA alternatives based on the analysis in the Preliminary Draft EIS, pages 5-8 and 5-10. This shows that EFH Alternative 1a (Collaborative) with trawl RCA removal (Alt. 2a) and EFH Alternative 1a + 1c (MTC) + 1d (Garibaldi Reef) + 1c (Rittenburg Bank) + 1f (Potato Bank) with RCA removal result in a net loss in total area protected and a loss of protection for some priority habitat features. Alternative 1b (Oceana et al.) combined with the trawl RCA removal results in an increase in habitat protection. Importantly, landings and revenue from the proposed re-openings are highly similar and positive across all alternative combinations (±0.5%).

As confirmed by the Project Team analysis, Alternative 1b, in combination with Alternative 2a, would increase overall priority habitat protections coastwide and restore more groundfish bottom trawl fishing opportunities that it displaces. The Project Team analysis states (page 5-13):

> "Combination 4 merges Alternative 1.b (Oceana et al.) with Alternative 2.a (remove trawl RCA). It would result in closing areas contributing 2.8 percent and 3.36 percent of coastwide landings (pounds) and revenues, respectively, in the recent period (2011 to 2014), and would reopen areas contributing 11.94 percent and 11.08 percent of coastwide landings (pounds) and revenues, respectively, in the historic period (1997 to 2001) … giving fishermen additional flexibility and the opportunity to fish more selectively. Most of these areas have been closed for 16 years, and reopening them could result in higher achievement of ACLs, which would be a positive economic impact to the fleet and to fishing-dependent coastal communities."[1]

The remainder of this submission includes a series of maps comparing EFH Conservation Area alternatives to illustrate key differences in the alternatives, for example, where Alternative 1b includes key priority habitats not included in Alternative 1a, while avoiding valuable trawl grounds. In addition, these maps also show examples where proposed EFHCA openings proposed in Alternative 1a and 1c will open known priority habitats sensitive to bottom trawling. These maps demonstrate a suite of examples where the Council can adopt Alternative 1b that will benefit fishing opportunities by protecting key known nurseries and sensitive habitats while maintaining bottom trawl opportunities.

Oceana appreciates the Council's many years of investment in this process, and continued work to advance the conservation and enhancement of groundfish essential fish habitat (EFH) and the protection of deep-sea ecosystems. Thank you for your hard work and commitment to science, conservation and sustainable fisheries.

Sincerely,

Geoffrey Shester, Ph.D.

MAPS

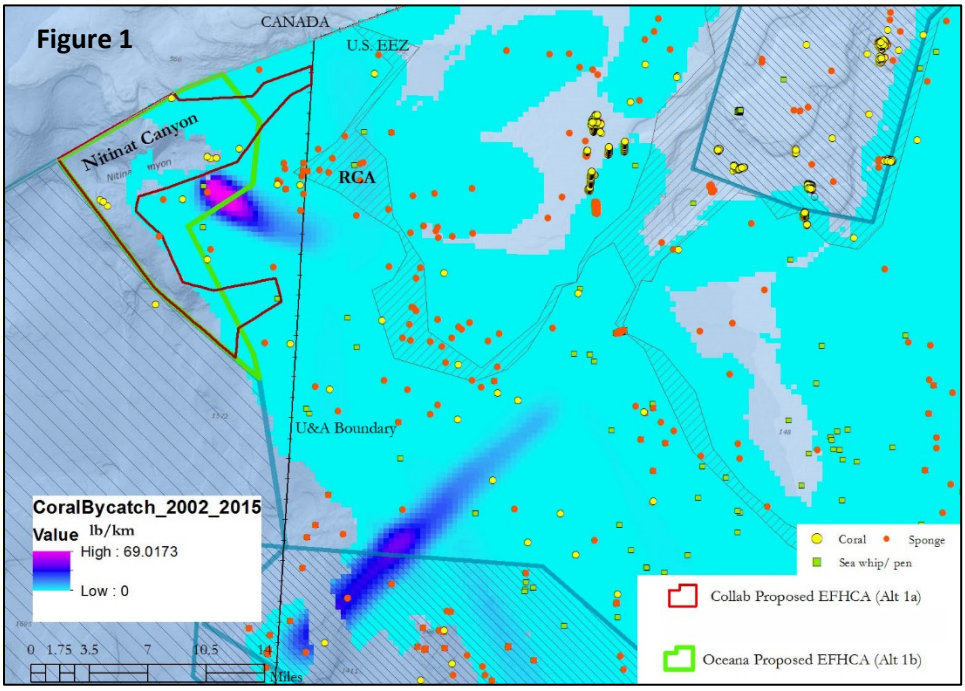

The following set of maps compare some proposed EFH conservation area modifications contained in Alternative 1a (Collaborative), Alternative 1b (Oceana et al.) and Alternative 1c (MTC). The maps show the location and extent of known priority habitat features (i.e. submarine canyons, rocky reefs, corals, sponges and sea whips/ sea pens), recent bottom trawl fishing effort (2011-13) and coral bycatch in the groundfish trawl fishery (2002-2015). Spatial data displayed in these maps are available on the EFH Data Portal,[2] NOAA Deep Sea Coral Research and Technology Program[3] and NOAA Fisheries Northwest Fisheries Science Center (NWFSC).[4] Oregon shrimp trawl effort (2007-2011) was provided by the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife.

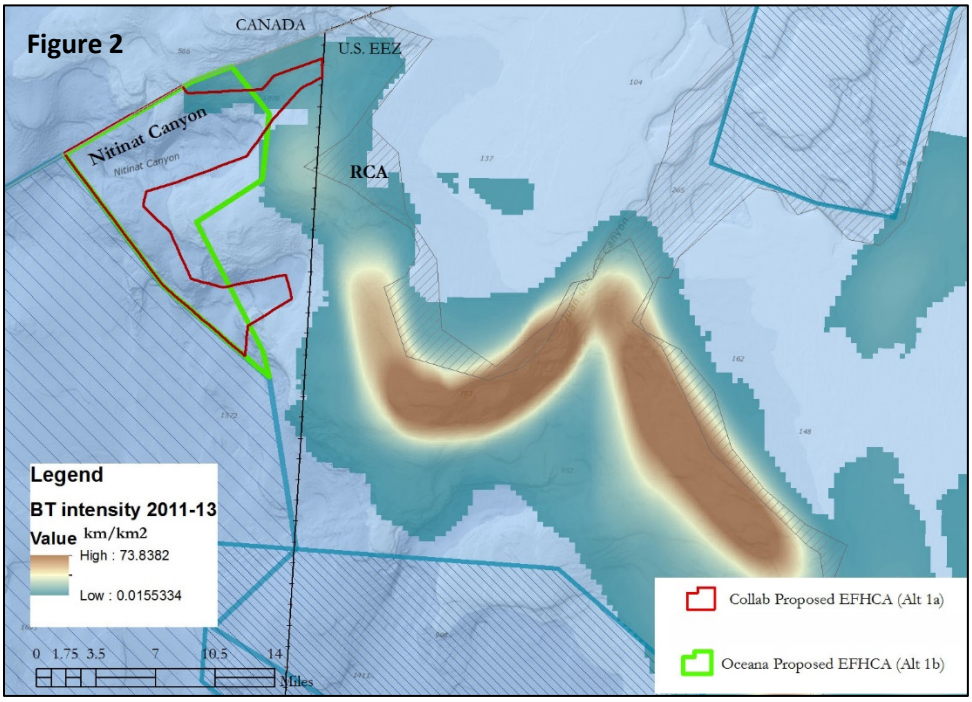

This set of maps does not cover all areas in each alternative. For more information, we encourage you to see the Northwest Fisheries Science Center FRAM data map at: https://www.nwfsc.noaa.gov/data/map

Figures 1-2. Comparing the proposed Nitinat Canyon/ Olympic Footprint Modification EFHCAs off the Northwest Washington Coast contained in Alternative 1a and 1b. Alternative 1b includes a known coral bycatch hotspot and avoids high intensity bottom trawling. The light blue polygons with light blue hash lines are either the existing EFHCAs or the deep-water bottom trawl footprint closure (>700 fathoms/ 1,280 meters).

Figures 3-4. The proposed Quinault Canyon areas in Alternatives 1a and 1b are nearly identical, both adjoining the existing Biogenic 2 EFHCA and deep-water conservation areas (>700 fathoms), protecting deep submarine canyon habitat, deep-sea sponge and avoiding significant bottom trawl displacement.

Figures 5-7. Proposed Grays Canyon EFHCA modifications showing substrate, 2002-2015 bottom trawl coral bycatch and 2011-13 bottom trawl intensity. Alternative 1a would open deep canyon habitat in the southwest side of the current EFHCA. Both 1a and 1b would close a similar area on the southeast side along the upper slope and shelf overlapping the RCA.

Figures 8-10. Proposed Grays Canyon, Willapa Canyonhead, Astoria Footprint, and Astoria Canyonhead EFHCAs showing canyon features, rocky substrates, structure forming invertebrates, 2002-15 coral bycatch, and 2011-12 trawl intensity. Alternative 1b (Oceana) avoids area of high trawl intensity while protecting priority habitats along the upper slope, overlapping the RCA and deep submarine canyon habitats.

Figures 11-12. Proposed South Nehalem Reef/ Garibaldi Reef EFHCAs west of Tillamook, OR as in Alternative 1b (Oceana), 1c (MTC), and 1d (Garibaldi Reef South). Alternative 1b + 1d would protect the full extent of the reef habitat in the area and avoid core groundfish bottom trawl (figure 11) and Oregon shrimp trawl fishing grounds (figure 12).

Figure 13. Proposed Daisy Bank modifications in Alternative 1b (Oceana) and 1c (MTC). Oceana opposes the MTC alternative which would open two parts of the existing EFHCA containing rocky reef habitat, corals and sponge. Opening this EFHCA known to contain priority habitat features is unwarranted, especially when also opening significant area to the north and south currently in the trawl RCA. Alternative 1b would maintain protections for rocky reef habitat on the north side of the current EFHCA. Oceana dove on the current EFHCA and our proposed Daisy Bank EFHCA modification area in an ROV in 2013 and document large sponge gardens, rockfish and hard substrates. Figures 14-16. Proposed Heceta Bank modifications in Alternative 1b (Oceana) and 1c (MTC). The MTC alternative misses much of the well-document reef habitat at Heceta Bank. Alternative 1b, in contrast, protects the full extent of the reef and essential fish habitat for yelloweye rockfish, while avoiding areas important to the bottom trawl fleet.

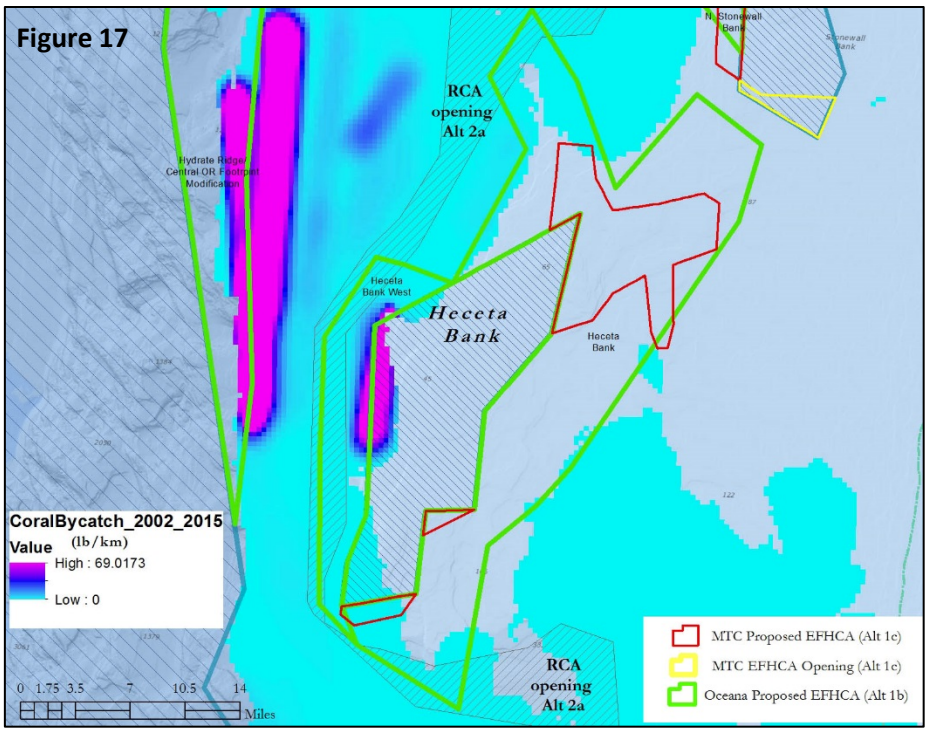

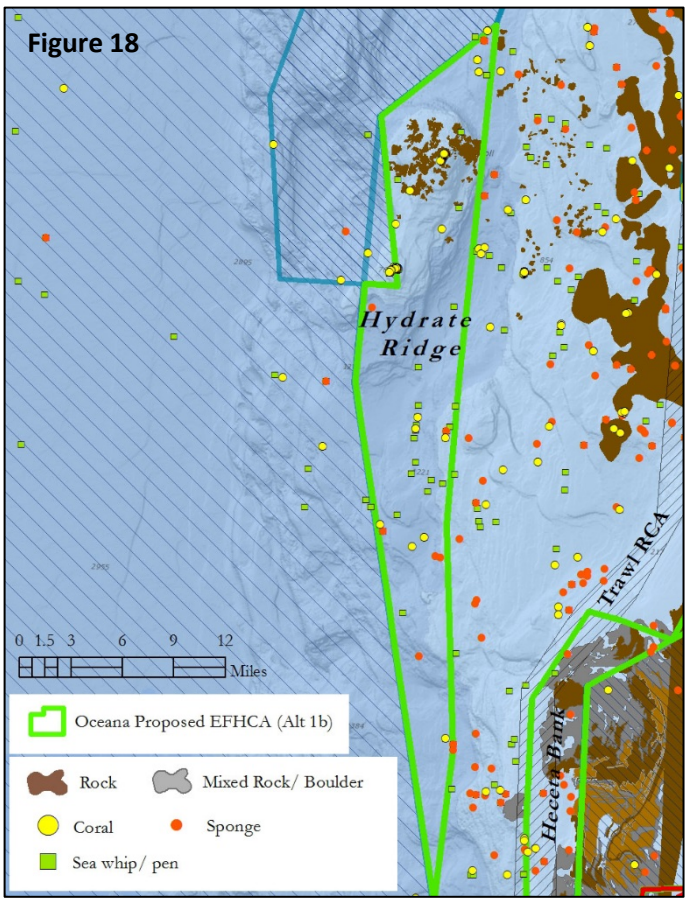

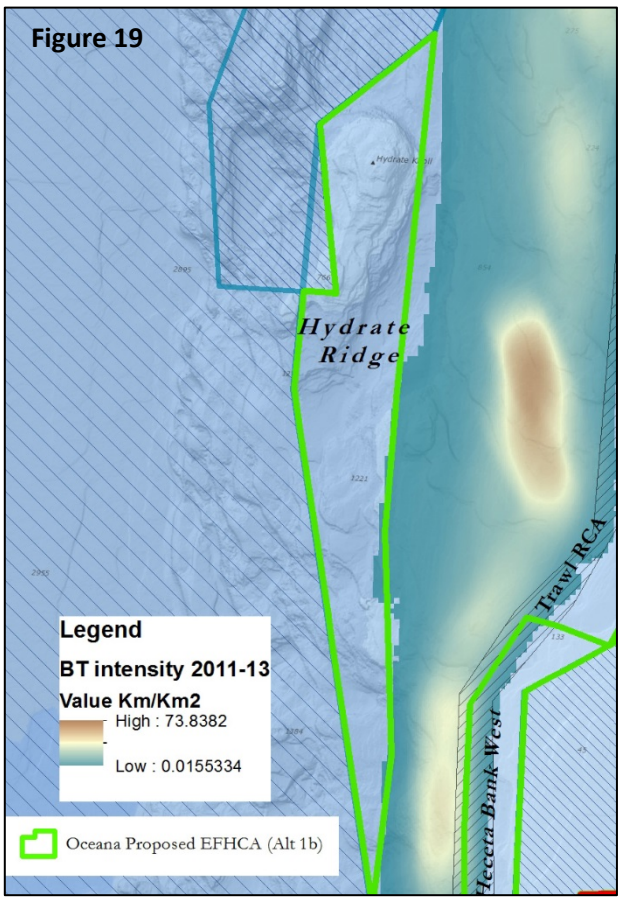

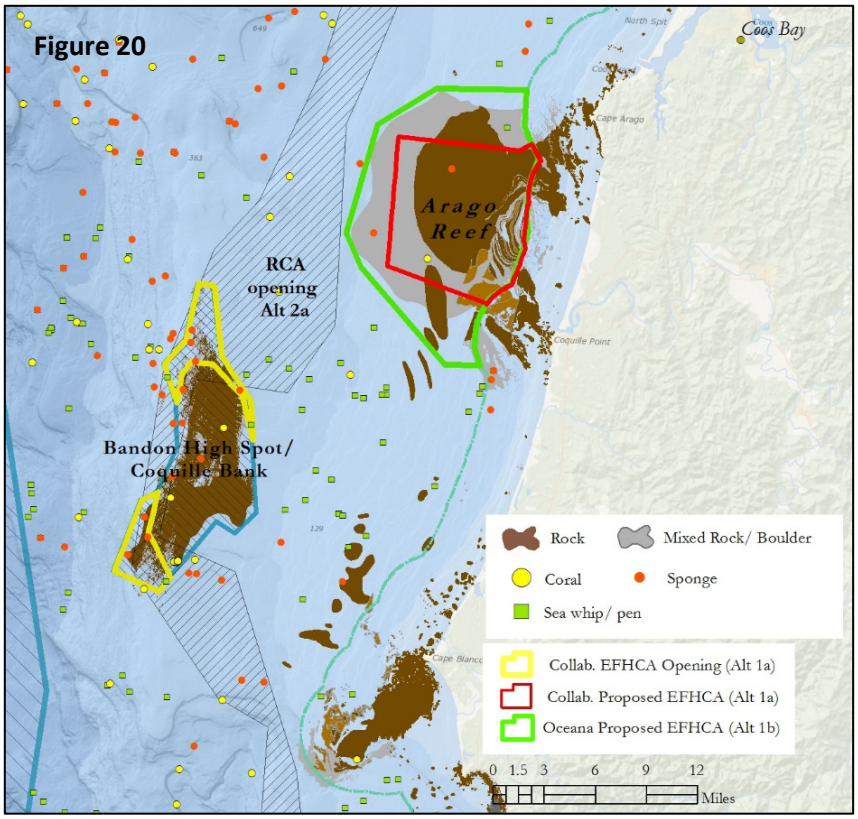

Figure 17. Groundfish bottom trawl coral bycatch (2002-2015) showing a coral bycatch hotspot on the western side of Heceta Bank and eastern side of Hydrate Ridge. These areas should be protected to prevent future impacts in these areas.

Figures 18-19. The proposed Hydrate Ridge EFHCA in Alternative 1b avoids important bottom trawl areas (right) and protects priority habitats and unique deep-sea methane seep environments.

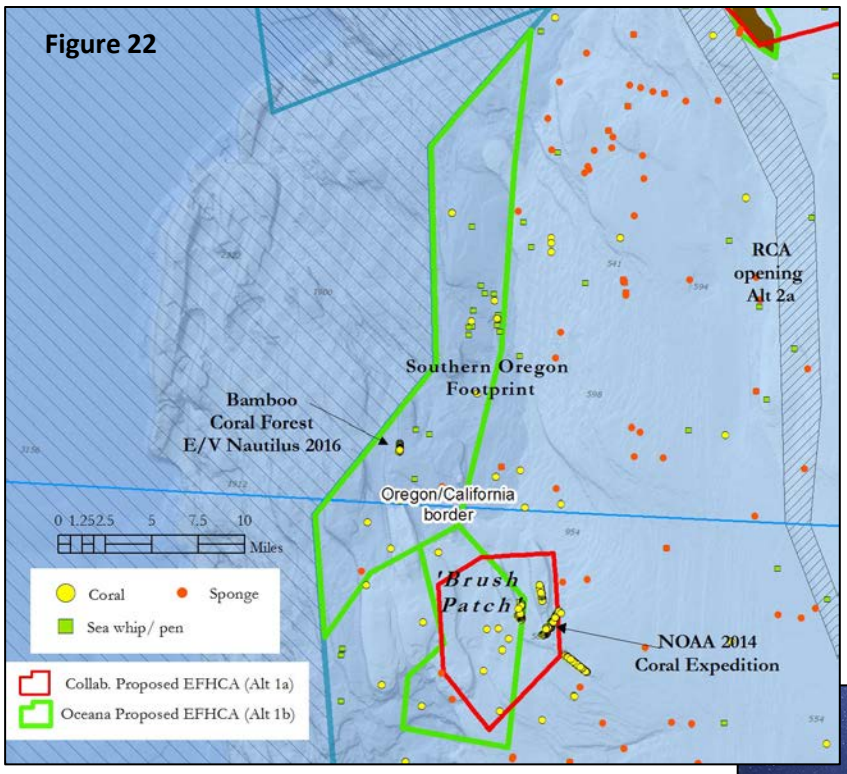

Figures 20-21. Alternative 1a and 1b both propose a new EFHCA at the large Arago Reef southwest of Coos Bay, Oregon. Alternative 1b (Oceana) protects the full extent of the reef while avoiding bottom trawl effort displacement. Alternative 1a (Collaborative) protects only part of the Arago Reef and would open the north and south sides of the Bandon High Spot EFHCA known to contain rocky substrates and habitat forming invertebrates.

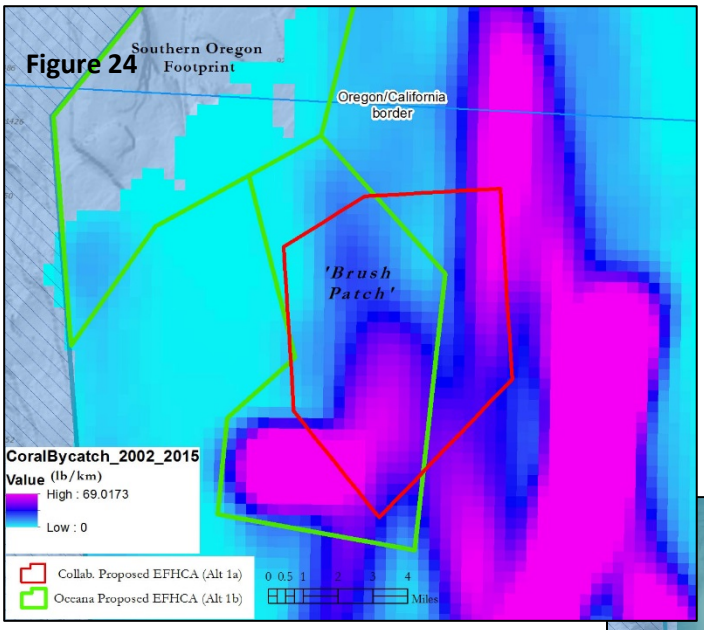

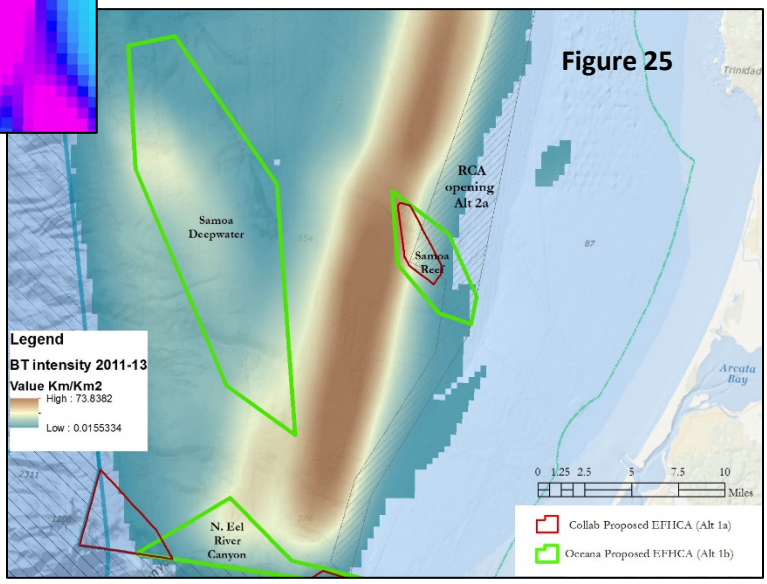

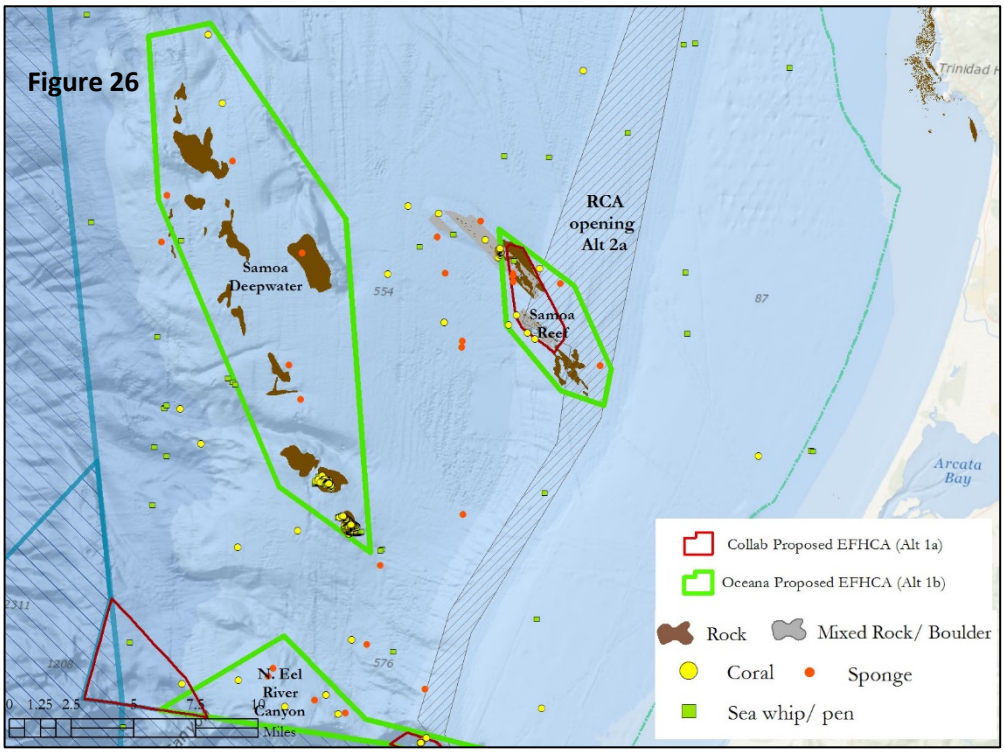

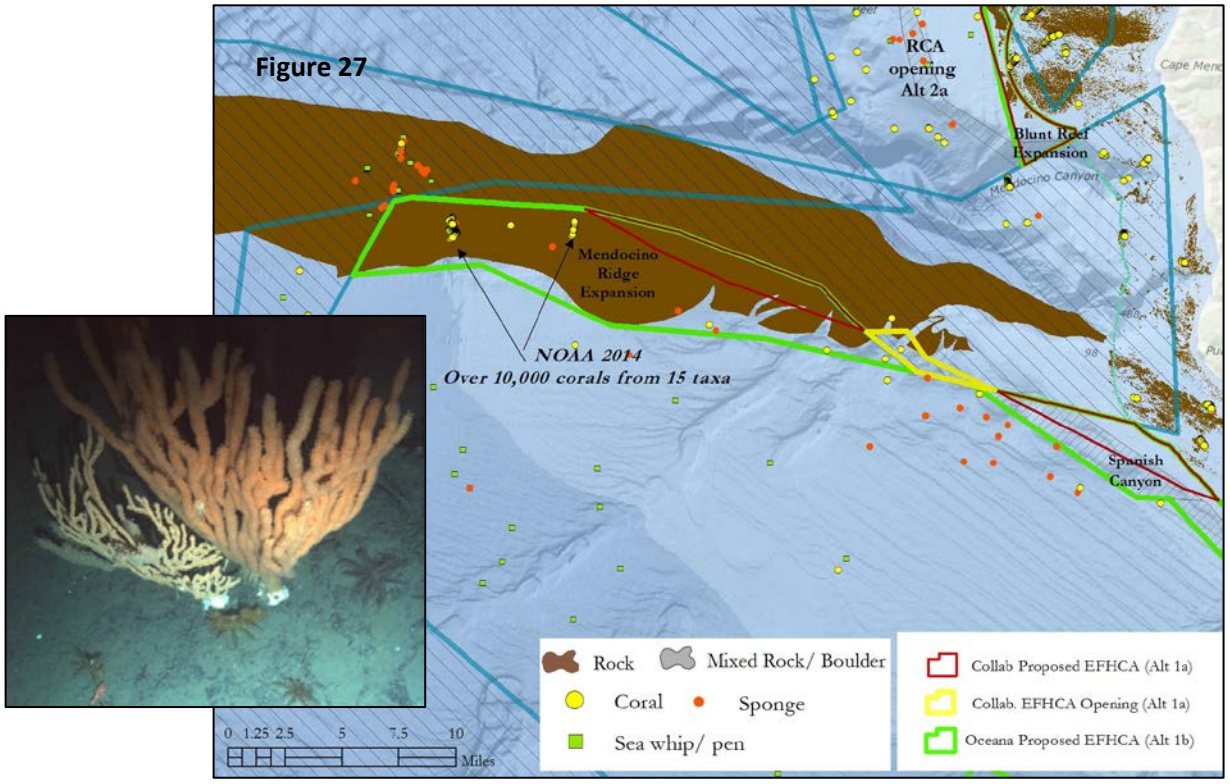

Figure 24. Showing high coral bycatch (2002-2015) in the groundfish trawl fishery in the Northern California areas of the "Brush Patch" (Alt 1a) and the overlapping Oceana proposed Crescent City Deepwater Hotspot (Alt 1b). The Oceana proposed area was designed to prevent further coral bycatch in this well-documented bycatch hotspot.

Figures 25-26. The proposed Samoa Deepwater EFHCA in Alternative 1b protects deep rocky reef habitat on the continental slope west of Arcata, California. There are 2,071 documented coral observations in this proposal area. Compared with the smaller proposed Samoa Reef area in Alt. 1a, Alt. 1b (Oceana) protects the full reef located inside the current trawl RCA.

Figures 27-28. The proposed southern expansion of the Mendocino Ridge EFHCA in Alternative 1b protects deep rocky reef habitat and over 10,000 coral colonies documented by NOAA in 2014 (Yoklavich et al. 2016). The proposal area in Alternative 1a (Collaborative) misses much of the reef here and fails to protect the newly identified coral gardens, so as to preserve bottom trawl fishing effort in the area. Photo, NOAA: two types of bamboo coral at 1,100 m depth in the proposed Mendocino Ridge EFHCA.

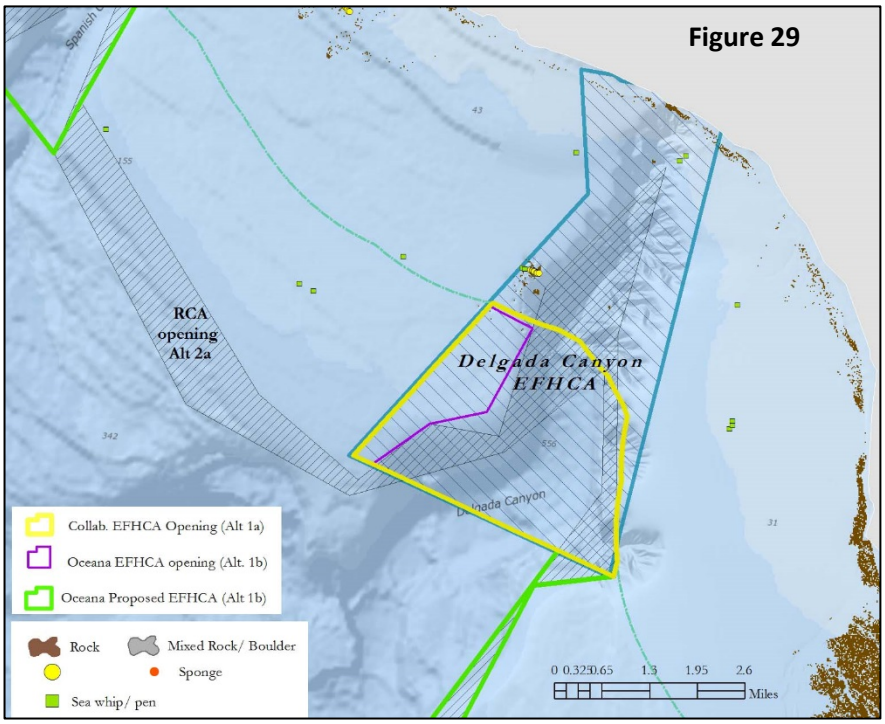

Figure 29. Alternative 1a and Alternative 1b both include opening part of the Delgada Canyon EFHCA. Alt 1a would open the entire canyon area in federal waters where 1b would open just the shallower area located on the shelf above the canyon (outlined in purple). There is no new research to confirm this EFHRC does not contain additional priority habitat features. Oceana's support for the reopening in Alt 1b is conditional on the adjacent proposed closures in the "Delgada Canyon Deep" and "Spanish Canyon".

Figures 31-32. The collaborative Alternative 1a combined with opening the RCA (Alt. 2a) would result in a net loss for habitat protection in the Cordell Bank National Marine Sanctuary, by opening the trawl RCA where there is known reef habitat (Gobbler's Knob) and the proposed opening in the Cordell Bank EFHCA, where there is a large sea pen garden. Alternative 1b protects the full extent of the Gobbler's Knob reef and hundreds of new coral observations surrounding Cordell Bank. Effort data shows very little recent bottom trawling in this region.

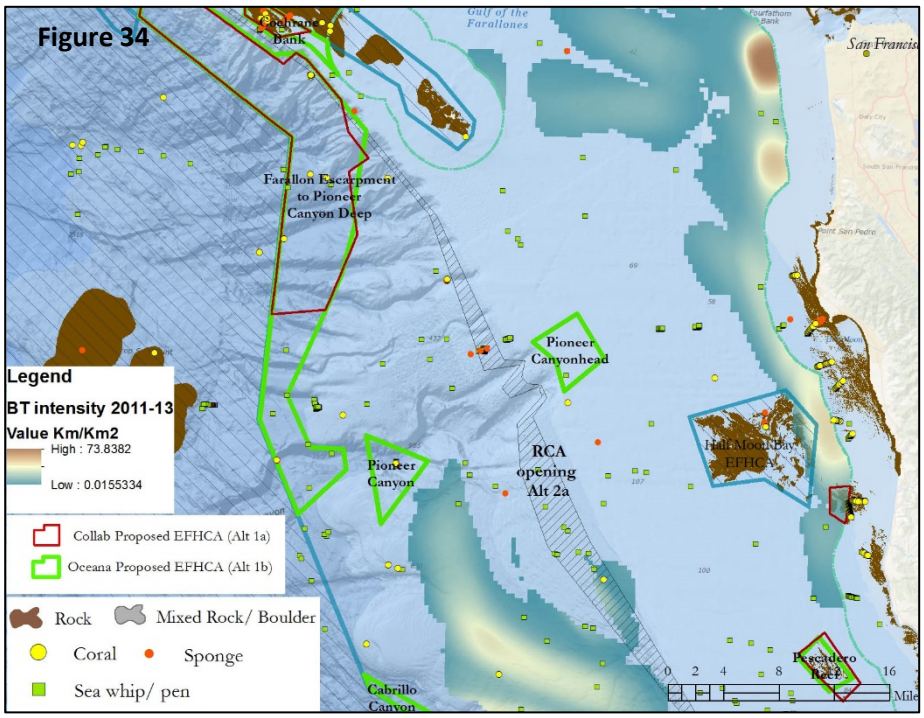

Figure 34. Both the Collaborative Alt. 1a and Oceana Alt. 1b protect the Farallon Escarpment, however the proposal in Alt. 1b extends to the bottom Pioneer Canyon. New seafloor mapping data from the Greater Farallones National Marine Sanctuary, provided in the PFMC briefing book, shows hard, rocky substrates in the Pioneer Canyon area.

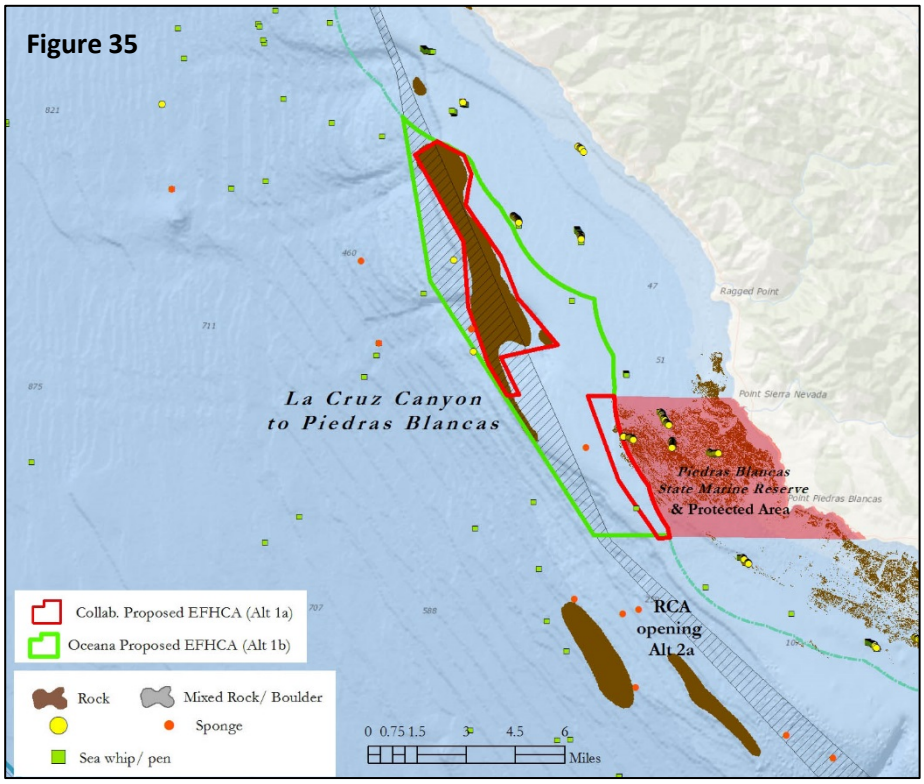

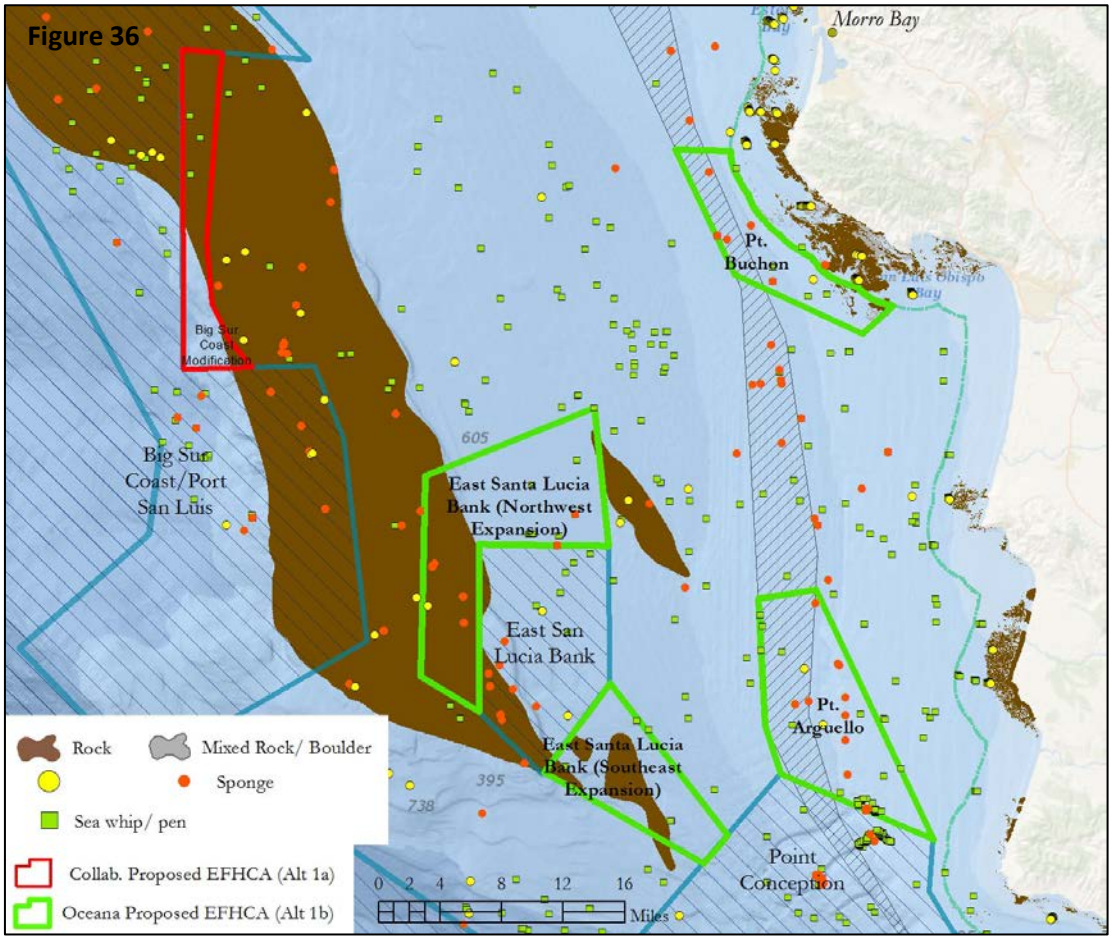

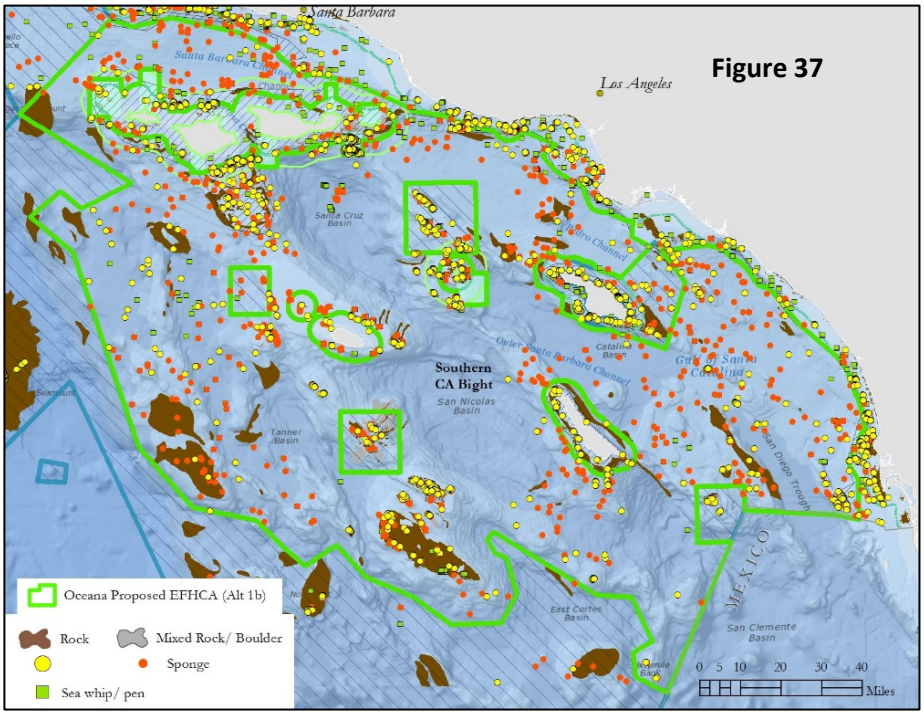

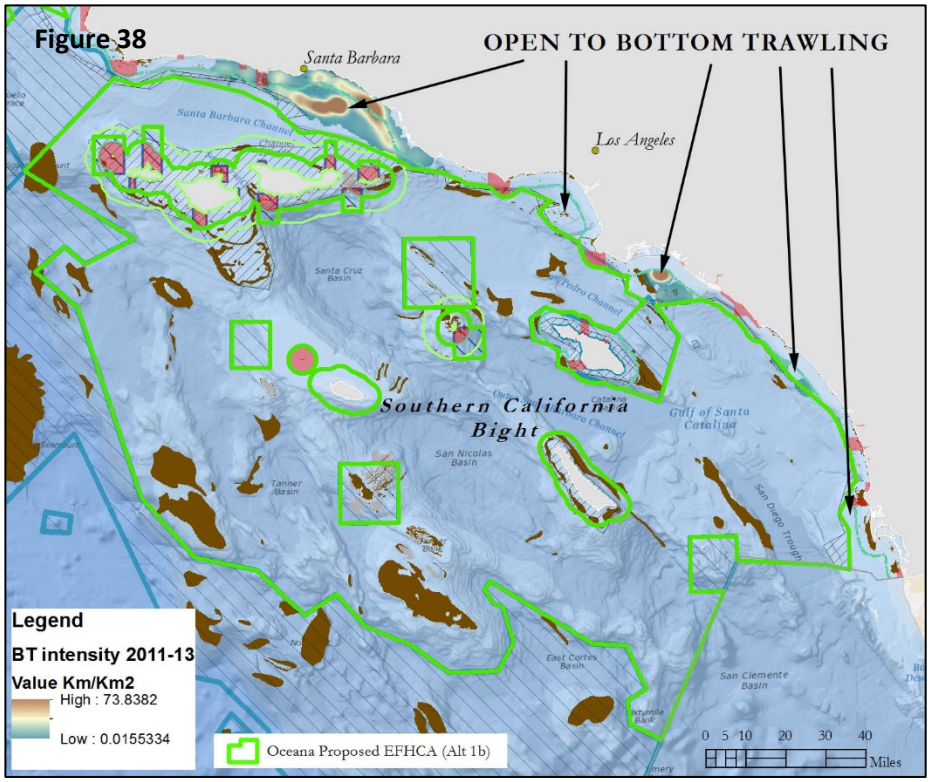

Figure 35. Collaborative Alt. 1a and Oceana Alt. 1b at the La Cruz Canyon to Piedras Blancas area off central California. The Alternative 1b proposal area is designed to protect the full reef features, overlap the trawl RCA and its slightly larger size and straight lines allow for improved enforcement compared with the two smaller areas in Alt 1a.

Figure 36. Proposed EFHCA in Alt. 1a modifying the Big Sur EFHCA west of Morro Bay and the proposal areas in Alt. 1b East Santa Lucia Bank add to the protection of rocky reef habitat in this area. The area at Pt. Buchon in Alt 1b would keep part of the trawl RCA and a reef extending out from the nearshore, closed to bottom trawling. The Pt. Arguello proposal area in Alt. 1b would also keep some of the RCA closed in this region, while protecting an area containing coral and sponge observations. The 2011-13 bottom trawl intensity data layer does not show any bottom trawl effort in this region.

Figures 37-38. The Southern California Bight area in Alternative 1b (Oceana) protects key groundfish spawning habitat and juvenile and adult rearing areas from bottom trawling. Protecting this essential fish habitat will ensure sensitive and vulnerable seafloor habitats are protected, where groundfish can flourish and ultimately maintain and support existing fixed gear fisheries in this area. The proposal area includes nearly 8,000 deep-sea coral records and over 13,750 sponge observations as documented in the NOAA Deep Sea Coral and Sponge Database.

Protecting this area is consistent with NOAA's precautionary policy regarding deep-sea corals (NOAA 2010), creating a "study first" system in which areas where the industry seek approval to trawl would have to be first studied and explored, and a determination made that bottom trawling would not adversely affect vulnerable habitats.
